

#11,876

THE Mobile Finley

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT CONNECTED,

IN

THE HISTORY

O F

THE JEWS AND NEIGHBOURING NATIONS,

FROM

The Declension of the Kingdoms of Israel and Judah, to the Time of Christ.

BY HUMPHREY PRIDEAUX, D.D. DEAN OF NORWICH.

PART I. VOL. I.

FRINTED BY D. SCHAW AND CO. LAWN-MARKET; FOR JAMES AND ANDREW DUNCAN, EOOKSELLERS, GLASGOW.

D A N I E L,

EARL OF NOTTINGHAM,

PRESIDENT OF HIS MAJESTY'S MOST HONOURABLE PRIVY COUNCIL.

My Lord,

TT being by your recommendation to your noble father, that I was by him made prebendary of the cathedral church of Norwich, while he was Lord Chancellor of England, and it being also by your Lordship's like favourable recommendation of me to her late Majesty Queen Anne, that I was promoted to be dean of the fame church, I humbly offer unto your Lordship this product of my studies, in a grateful acknowledgement of the favours I have received from you. And, if the Public receive any benefit from it (as I hope fome may), nothing is more just and reasonable, than that they should receive it through your Lordship's hands, who, in having been fo much a patron to the author, have acquired thereby the best title to all the fruits of my labours. labours. What I now offer unto your Lordfhip is only the first part of what is intended.
If God gives life, the second shall follow, and beg its passage into the world under the same patronage. The only additional favour I am now capable of receiving, is your Lordship's kind acceptance of this expression of my gratitude; which I humbly pray from your hands:
and I am,

My Lord,

Your most obedient, and Most obliged humble Servant,

HUMPHREY PRIDEAUX.

THE PRETACE.

HE calamitous diftemper of the stone, and the unfortunate management I fell under, after being cut for it, having driven me out of the pulpit, in wholly disabling me for that duty of my profession, that I might not be altogether useless, I undertook this work, hoping, that the clearing of the facred history by the profane, the connecting of the Old Testament with the New, by an account of the times intervening, and the explaining of the prophecies that were fulfilled in them, might be of great use to many. What is now published is only the first part of my defign. If God gives life, the other will foon after follow; but if it should please him, who is the Disposer of all things, that it happen otherwise, yet this history being brought down to the times, when the canon of the Hebrew scriptures was finished, it may of itself be reckoned a complete work: for it may serve as an epilogue to the Old Testament, in the same manner, as what after is to follow, will be a prologue to the New.

Chronology and geography being necessary helps to history, and good chronological tables being most useful for the one; as good maps are for the other; I have taken full care of the former, not only by adding fuch tables in the conclusion of the work, as may answer this end, but also by digesting the whole into the form of annals under the years before Christ, and the years of the kings that then reigned over Judea; both which are added in the margin at the beginning of every year, in which the actions happened that are related. And as to the latter, fince Dr Wells, Cellarius, and Reland have fufficiently provided for it; both by good maps of the countries this history relates to, and also by accurate descriptions of them, I need do no more than refer the reader to what they have already done in this matter. What Dr Wells hath done herein, being written in English, will best serve the English reader; but they that are also skilled in the Latin tongue may moreover confult the other two.

In the annals, I have made use of no other æra, but that of the years before Christ, reckning it backward from the vulgar æra of Christ's incarnation, and not from the true time of it. For learned men are not all agreed in the fixing of the true time of Christ's incarnation, some placing it two years, and some four years, before the vulgar æra. But where the vulgar æra begins, all know that use it; and therefore the reckning of the years before Christ backward from thence, makes it a fixed and certain æra. The difference that is between the true year of our Saviour's incarnation, and that of the vulgar æra of it, proceeded from hence, that it was not till the 527th year of that æra, that it was first brought into use. *Dionysius Exiguus, a Scythian by birth, and then a Roman abbot, was the first author of it; and Beda our countryman, taking it from him, used it in all his writings; and the recommendation which he gave it thereby, hath made it of common use among Christians ever since, especially in these western parts. Had all Christians calculated their time by it from the beginning of the church of Christ (as it could be wished they had), there could then have been no mistake in it. But it being 527 years after Christ's incarnation, before this æra of it was ever used, no wonder, that, after so great a distance of time, a mistake was made in the fixing of the first year of it.

Vol. I. å

The æra from the creation of the world is of very common ufe in chronology; but this I have rejected, because of the uncertainty of it, most chronologers following different opinions herein, some reckoning the time of the creation sooner, and some later, and scarce any two agreeing in the same year for it.

The Julian period is indeed a certain measure of time, but its certainty depends upon a reckoning backward, in the fame manner as that of the æra before Christ. For it being a period of 7080 Julian years, made out of the three cycles of the fun, moon, and indiction, multiplied into each other; and the first year of it being that in which all these three cycles begin together, this first year can be no otherwife fixed, than by computing backward from the present numbers of those cycles through all the different combinations of them, till we come to that year, in which the first year of every one of them meet together; which carries up the reckoning feveral hundred years before the creation, and fixeth the beginning of the period in an imaginary point of time before time was. And therefore, although from that beginning it computes downward, yet the whole of its certainty is by a backward reckoning from the prefent years of those cycles: for, according as they are, all must he reckoned upward even to the beginning of the period. So that, although in appearance it reckons downward, yet in reality it is only a backward computation, to tell us how many years fince any thing was done from the present year. For in the numbers of the three cycles of the present year, it hath a real and fixed foundation for an upward reckoning, and fo in any other year, in which the faid numbers are known; whereas it hath none at all for a downward reckoning, but what is in the imagination only. And therefore, this being the true and real use of the Julian period, the æra before Christ for the times I treat of, ferves all the purposes of chronology altogether as well, if not much better. the years before Christ, to those since Christ, according to the vulgar æra, it immediately tells us, how many years fince any action before the time of Christ was done, and the Julian period can do no more; and indeed it cannot do thus much but by reduction, whereas it is done the other way directly, immediately, and at first fight. However, in the tables I have put the Julian period, and have reduced to it not only the years before Christ, but also the years of the princes reigning in Judea, and the neighbouring countries, and all things else that are treated of in this History; and hereby the Synchronisms, or coincident times and transactions of other nations may eafily be known. The year I compute by in the annals is the Julian year, which begins from the first of January; and to this I reduce all the actions I treat of, though they were originally reckoned by other The a Greeks, before the time of Meto, began their year from the winter folftice, and after from that of the fummer. The Egyptians, Chaldeans, and ancient Persians, reckened the first of the month Thoth to be always the first day of their year, which, confishing of 365 days, without a leap year b, it begun every fourth year one day sooner than it did before; and so, in the space of 1460 years, its beginning was carried backward through the whole folar The Syrians and the Phoenicians begun their year from the autumnal equinox; and fo did also the Hebrews, till their coming up out of the land of Egypt. But that happening in the month of Nisan, in commemoration of this deliverance; they afterwards begun their year from c the beginning of that month, which usually happened about the time of the vernal equinox: and this form they ever after made use of in the calculating of the times of their fasts and festivals, and all other ecclesiastical times and concerns; but, in all civil matters, as contracts, obligations, and fuch other affairs, which were of a fecular nature, they still made use of the old form, and begun their year as formerly, from the first of Tifri, which happened about the time of the autumnal equinox; and from hence they began d all their jubilees and fabbatical years, and all other their computations of civil matters, as they still do the years of the creation of the world, and the years of their æra of contracts; which are the only epochas they now compute pail times Anciently the form of the year which they made use of was wholly inartificial: for it was not fettled by any afronomical rules or calculations, but was made up of lunar months fet out by the phasis or appearance of the moon. When they saw the new moon, then they began their months, which fometimes confilled of o So it was in the time of the last Darius; but afterwards the Persians compenfated for the lofs of the leap year, by adding an intercalary month of 3. days every 13th year.

^{*...} e Scaliger, Calvifius, and other Chronologers, in those parts of their waks, where they write of the vulgar ara of Christ. And see also Da Pin's Himory of Ecclesiastical writers, cent. 6. p. 42. and Dr Cave's Historia Literatio, 1.403.

Vide Scaligerum, Fetavium, aliofque chronologos, in eis locis ubi de anno Grecoruns

^c Exod. xii. 2.

d Levit. xxv. 9. 10. Talmud in Tract. Rosh Hasshanah, Maimonides in Kiddush Harbodisk, Selden de Anno Civili veterum Judzerum.

20 days, and fometimes of 30, according as the new moon did fooner or later appear. The reason of this was, because the synodical course of the moon (that is, from new moon to new moon) being 29 days and an half, the half day, which a month of 29 days fell short of, was made up by adding it to the next month, which made it confilt of 30 days; so that their months confilted of 20 days and 30 days alternatively. None of them had fewer than 29 days, and therefore they never looked for the new moon before the night following the 29th day; and, if they then faw it, the next day was the first day of the following month. Neither had any of their months more than 30 days, and therefore they never looked for the new moon after the night following the thirtieth day; but then, if they faw it not, they concluded, that the appearance was obstructed by the clouds, and made the next day the first of the following month, without expecting any longer; and of twelve of these months their common year confisted. But twelve lunar months falling eleven days short of a solar year, every one of those common years began eleven days fooner than the former; which, in thirtythree years time, would carry back the beginning of the year through all the four fcafons to the fame point again, and get a whole year from the folar reckoning (as is now done in Turkey, where this fort of year is in use); for the remedying of which, their usage was sometimes in the third year, and sometimes in the second, to cast in another month, and make their year then consist of thirteen months; whereby they constantly reduced their lunar year, as far as fach an interculation could effect it, to that of the fun, and never fuffered the one, for any more than a month, at any time to vary from the other. And this they were forced to do for the fake of their festivals: for their feath of the passover (the first day of which a was always fixed to the middle of their month Nifan) being to be celebrated by their eating of the Paschal lamb, and the offering up of the wave-sheaf, as the first fruits of their barley harwest; and their feast of Pentecost, which was b kept the sistieth day after the fixteenth of Nifan (which was the day in which the wavetheaf was offered) being to be celebrated by the offering of the two wave-loaves, as the first fruits of their wheat-harvest; and their feeth of tabernacles, which was always begun d on the fifteenth of Tifri, being fixed to the time of their ingathering of all the fruits of the earth; the passover could not be observed, till the lambs were grown fit to be eaten, and the barley fit to be reaped; nor the Pentecost, till the wheat was ripe; nor the feast of tabernacles, till the lingatherings of the vineyard and oliveyard were over: and therefore these schivals being fixed to these set seasons of the year,

^{*} Exod. xii. 3-20. Levit. xxi'i. 4-3. Numb. xxviii. 16. 17.

b Levit mail 15-17. Deut wi. 9.

C Here it is to be obtained, that in Judea the barley-harvest was before the wheat-harvest, and so it was in Egypt; for the barley was in the ear when the wheat and rye were not grown up, Emad. in 31.30.

[&]quot; Levit. 15.55. 34. 39.

the making of the intercalation above mentioned was necessary, for the keeping them within a month fooner or later always to them. Their rule for the doing of this was; a whenever, according to the course of the common year, the fifteenth day of Nisan (which was the first day of unleavened bread, and the first day of their Paschal folemnity) happened to fall before the day of their vernal equinox, then they intercalated a month, and the Paschal solemnity was thereby carried on a month farther into the year, and all the other festivals with it: for, according as the Paschal festival was fixed, fo were all the rest; that is, the Pentecost sifty days after the second day of the Paschal feast (i. e. the 16th of Nisan), on which the wave-sheaf was offered; and the feast of tabernacles six months after the beginning of the faid Paschal feast. For as the first day of the Paschal feast was the fifteenth of Nisan (the fourteenth, on the evening of which the folemnity began in the flaying of the Paichal lambs, being but the eve of the paffover), so the first day of the feast of tabernacles was on the 13th of Tifri, just fix months aster. To make this the more clear, let it be observed, that the Hebrew months were as followeth, 1. Nifan, 2. Iyar, 3. Siyan, 4. Tamuz, 5. Ab, 6. Elul, 7. Tifri, 8. Marchesvan, 9. Cilleu, 10. Tebeth, 11. Shebat, 12. Adar. And these twelve made their common year: but in their intercalated years there was another month added after Adar, which they called Veadar, or the fecond Adar; and then their year confifted of 13 months. Supposing, therefore, their vernal equinox should have been on the 10th of March (whereabout now it is), and that the 15th of Milan, the first day of their paffover, should, in the common course of their year, happen to fall on the 9th of March, the day before the equinox; then, on their forefeeing of this, they intercalated a month, and after their Adar added their Veadar, which fometimes confilted of 29 days, and fometimes of 30, according as it happened; at prefent we will fuppose it to be of 30 days, and then the first of Nisan, which is to begin this year, instead of being on the 23d of February (as otherwife it would), must be carried on 30 days forward to the 25th of March, and their paffover to the 8th of April following. But the next year after beginning eleven days fooner, for the reason I have mentioned, the 1st of Nisan must then have happened on the 14th of March, and the first day of the passover on the 28th of the same month; and, the next year after that, the fift of Nifan, must for the same reason have happened on the 3d of March, and the first day of the passover on the 17th of March; and, the next year after that, according to this calculation, the 1st of Nisan would have happened on the 20th of February, and the first day of the passover on the 6th of March following. But this being before the equinox, another interculation of the month Veadur mult have been made. And so after the same manner it went through all other years; whereby it came to pass, that the first of Nisan, which was the beginning of their year, always was within 15 days before, or 15 days after the vernal equinox, that is, within the compass of 30 days in the whole, fooner or later; and according as that was fixed, fo were fixed also the beginnings of all their other months, and all the fasts and feasts observed in them. But this inartificial way of forming their months and years, was in use among them only while they lived in their own land, and there might eafily receive notice of what was ordained in this matter by those who had the care and ordering of it: for when they became dispersed through all nations, they were forced to make use of cycles and astronomical calculations for the fixing of their new moons and intercalations, and the times of their feafts, fasts, and other observances, that so they might be every where uniform herein. The first cycle they made use of for this purpose 2 was that of 84 years: by this they fixed their Paschal feast, and by that their whole year besides; and the use hereof the primitive Christians borrowed from them, and, for some of the first centuries, fixed their Easter in every year according to it: but this, after some time, being found to be faulty, Meto's cycle of 19 years b was, after the council of Nice, brought into use by them for this purpose instead of the other; and the Jews, following their example herein, almost about the same time, came into the same usage also; and upon this cycle is founded the prefent form of their year. The first who began to work it into this shape, c was Rabbi Samuel, rector of the Jewish school at Sora in Mesopotamia: Rabbi Adda, who was a great astronomer, pursued his scheme; and after him Rabbi Hillel, about the year of our Lord 360, brought it to that perfection in which now it is; and being Nasi, or prince of their fanhedrim, he gave it the authority of his fanction, and by virtue thereof it hath ever fince been obseryed by them, and they fay always is to be observed to the coming of the Meshah. According to this form d there are, within the compass of the said 19 years cycle, seven intercalated years, consisting of 13 months, and 12 common years, confissing of 12 months. Their intercalated years are the 3d, the 5th, the 8th, the 11th, the 14th, the 17th, and the 19th of that cycle; and when one round of this cycle is over, they begin another; and fo constantly, according to it, fix their new moons (at which all their months begin) and all their fasts and feasts in every year. And this form of their year, it must be acknowledged, is very exactly and astronomically contrived, and may truly be reckoned the greatest piece of art and ingenuity that is to be found among that people. They who would throughly understand it, may read Maimonides's tract Kid-

^a Talmud in Roth Hafshanah. Maimonides in Kidduth II., l.od.th. Selden de Auno Civili veterum Judgerum.

2 Vide Bucherium de antiquo Pafchali Judwerum Cyclo.

Luchafin; Shaliheleth Haccabala; & Zemach David, & ex iifdem Movi-nus in expecitat. Prima in Pentateuchum Samaritanum, cap. 3.

h Epifeda Ambroji 83. ad epifeopos per Amiliam conflitutos. It was by the council of Nice referred to the church of Alexandria every year to fix the cime of Eafter, and they did it by Meto's cycle of 19 years.

d Talmud in Rosh Hafshanah. Maimonides in Kiddush Hachodesh, & Sel-Lenus de Anno Civili veterum Indzonum.

sush Hachodesh, which hath been published in a very good Latin translation by Lewis de Veil, under the title, De Confeccatione Calendarum, where he will find it very exactly and perspicuously described.

These having been the forms of the Jewish year, that is, the inartificial form used by the ancients in the land of Canaan, and the artificial and aftronomical form now in use among the moderne throughout all their difperfions; according to neither of them can the days of the Jewish months be fixed to any certain days of the months in the Julian year: for, in both of them, the months being lunar, and the intercalations made of one whole lunar month at once, the days of those months, to the full extent of one full lunar month, fell fometimes fooner, and fometimes later in the folar form. Since the Jewish kalendar hath been fixed by Rabbi Hillel, upon the certain foundations of aftronomy, tables may indeed be made, which may point out to what day in that kalendar every day in the Julian year shall answer: but this cannot be done for the time before; because, while they went inartificially to work in this matter by the phasis and appearance of the moon, both for the beginning of their months and years, and the making of their intercalations, they did not always do it exactly; but often varied from the aftronomical truth herein. And this latter having been their way through all the times of which this History treats, we cannot, when we find the day of any Jewish month mentioned either in the scriptures, or in Josephus, reduce it exactly to its time in the Julian year, or there fix it any nearer, than within the compass of a month soon-Kepler indeed holds, that the Jewish year was a folar year, confishing of 12 months of 30 days each, and an addition of tive days after the last of them; and our countrymen Archbishop Uther, and Mr Lydiat, two of the most eminent chronologers that any age hath produced, go into the fame opinion. Such a year, 1 acknowledge, was in use among the Chaldeans, from whom Abraham was descended; and also among the Egyptians, with whom the Ifraelites long lived: and I doubt not, but that, before their coming out of the land of Egypt, they also reckoned their time by the same form. For the time of the flood is manifeltly computed by it in the book of Genefis, an hundred and fifty days being there made equal to five months, which proves those months to have been thirty-day months. But that the Ifraelites made use of this fort of year, after their coming out of Egypt, can never be made confishing with the Mosaical law. According to that, their year must be made up of months purely lunar, and could no otherwife, than by an intercalary month, be reduced to the folar form. and there being a necessity of making this intercalation for the keeping of their fellivals to their proper scasons, by this means it comes to pass, that the beginnings of their months cannot be fixed to any certain day in the Julian kalendar, but they fell always within the compass of 30 days sooner or later therein. That the thing may appear the clearer to the reader, I shall express it in this following scheme, wherein the first column gives the names of the Jewish months, and the second of the Julian months, within the compass of which the said Jewish months set over against them have always somer or later their beginning and ending; and this is the nearest view that can be given of the correspondency of the one with the other.

1 Nifan	$\begin{cases} M.irch \\ April. \end{cases}$	5 Ab	${\it fuly} \ {\it August.}$	9 Cisleu	S November. December.
2 Jair	§ April May.	6 Elul	{ August { September.	10 Tebeth	S December ' Finuary.
J Sivan	(May } June.	7 Tizri	September October.	II Shebat	S January Eebruary.
4 Tamuz	{ June July.	8 Merchesu	an { October November.	12 Adar	February March.

The 13th month called Veadar, or the fecond Adar, answered most the end of our March, it being then only intercalated, or cast in, when the beginning of Nisan would otherwise be carried back into the end of February.

I have, in the feries of this History, taken no notice either of the jubilees, or the fabbatical years of the Jews, both because of the uselessness, and also of the uncertainty of them. They are useless, because they help not to the explaining of any thing, either in the holy scriptures, or the histories of the times which I treat of; and they are uncertain, because it doth not appear when or how they were observed. It is acknowledged by most learned men, that the jubilees were no more regarded after the Babylonish captivity: and it is manifest from scripture, that the sabbatical years were wholly neglected for many ages before it. For the defolation, which happened to the country of Judea, under that captivity, is faid, in the second book of Chronicles (chap. xxxvi. 21.), to have been brought upon it for this very reason, that the land might enjoy its fabbaths, that is, those fabbatical years of rest, which the Jews, in neglecting the law of God concerning this matter, had deprived it of: and therefore, if we reckon to this defolation only the 52 years, that were from the destruction of the city and temple of Jerufalem, to the end of the Babylonish captivity (in which the land was wholly defolated), this will prove the observing of those fabbatical years to have been neglected for 364 years before that captivity. But, if we add hereto the other 18 years of that captivity, in which it was only in part defolated, and take in the whole 70 years of it into this reckoning, it will then carry up the time of this neglect much higher, even to 490 years before that captivity: and, as to the jubilees, there is no mention made of them any where through the whole feriptures, faving only in that law where they are enjoined; neither is there of their fabbatical years, faving only in the fame law, and the place in Chronicles above mentioned. There are indeed two other places of fcripture which fome underisand concerning them (that is, 2 Kings xix. 29. and Jeremiah xxxiv/xxxiv. 8-10.) But both these passages do better admit of other interpretations: for what is faid in the former of these, seems rather to refer to the defolations of the war, and the interruption of agriculture through the violences and calamity of it, than to a fabbatical year; and so Grotius and other learned men understand it. And what is faid in the other by Jeremiah, about the release of fervants, doth not infer a fabbatical year, nor a jubilee neither: for every Hebrew fervant " was to be released in the 7th year of his fervitude, though it were neither a jubilee, nor a fabbatical year; and therefore this instance infers neither of them: and those who undertake to interpret the law which enjoins these jubilees and sabbatical years, very much differ concerning them, both as to the time and manner of their observance. Some will have the reckening, both of the fabbatical years and the jubilees, to commence from the first entering of the Israelites into the land of Canaan; and therefore place the first sabbatical year in the 7th year after that entrance, and the first jubilee also according hereto: but others say, that the land was feven years in conquering and dividing, and that the 8th year was the first in which the Ifraelites began to fow and reap in it; and that therefore the 14th year was the first sabbatical year: and according to this reckoning they put the first sabbatical year, and the first jubilee, seven years later than the former, and so the numbers of all the rest that follow. And then, as to the time of the jubilee, there is this difpute, whether it be the same with the seventh sabbatical year, or the next year after. The reason of this dispute is, because if it be on the year after the 7th sabbatical year, then there will be two sabbatical years together, (for the year of jubilee was also b a sabbatical year); and in this case there would be the loss of two crops together; and then it will be asked, how could the people be supported? And they who, notwithstanding this objection, determine for the year next after the 7th fabbatical year to have been the year of jubilee, though 'they have the fcripture on their side in this particular, yet are not agreed where to begin the next week of years (or Shemittah, as the Jews call it) after that 7th fabbatical year; that is, whether the year of jubilee, or the next year after it, was to be the first year of that week or Shemittah. If the jubilee year were the first year of that week, then there would have been but five years for them to fow and reap in between the jubilee (which was alfo a fabbatical year) and the next fabbatical year after; whereas d the scripture faith they were to have fix. And if the first year of the next Shemittah were the next year after the jubilee, then the Shemittahs would not always fucceed in an exact feries immediately one after the other; but after the 7th Shemittah, the year of jubilee would intervene between that and the next; which disagreeth with the opinion of many. However, it is indeed the truth of the matter, and I know no objection

Exodus xxi. 2.
Levit. xxv. II:

Levit. xxv. 10.

jection against it, but that it exposeth the error of those, who, thinking that the fabbatical years did always happen each exactly on the 7th year after the former, have in that order and feries placed them in their chronological computations, without confidering, that after every 49th year a jubilee year did intervene between the Shemittah that then ended, and the beginning of the next that followed. But they act most out of way in this matter, who would confine Daniel's prophecy of the 70 weeks to fo many Shemittahs, as if these 70 weeks fell in exactly with 70 Shemittahs, that is, that the first week began with the first year of a Shemittah or sabbatical week, and ended with a fabbatical year, which was the last of a Shemittah; and fo all the rest down to the last of the whole number: and to this end some have perplexed themselves in vain to find out fabbatical years to fuit their hypotheses, and fix them to times to which they did never belong; whereas the prophecy means no more, than by the 70 weeks to express 70 times 7 years, that is, 490 in the whole, without any relation had either to Shemittahs or fabbatical years. And were it otherwife, the 70 weeks of Daniel, besides the 70 Shemittahs, must have contained 9 years more for the 9 jubilees, which must have happened within the compass of the faid 70 Shemittahs, and thereby make the whole number of those weeks to be 499 years; which no one that I know of hath ever yet faid. And therefore, fince there is nothing certain to be known concerning these sabbatical years and jubilees of the Jews, as to their ancient observance of them, and consequently there can be no use made of them, for the explication either of scripture or history, I have not troubled the reader with them in the body of this History; and I wish I have not troubled him too far in faying so much of them here in the Preface.

In the feries of this History, having often endeavoured to reduce the fums of money mentioned therein to the value they would bear with us in this prefent age, whether gold or filver, I think it requitite to lay down the rules whereby I make this reduction. It is to be observed, therefore, in order hereto, that, among the ancients, the way of reckoning their money was by talents. So the Hebrews, fo the Babylonians, fo the Greeks, and fo the Romans, did reckon; and of these talents they had subdivisions, which were usually into minas and drachms, i. e. of their talents into minas, and of their minas into drachms. The Hebrows had, besides these, their shekels and half Liekels, or bekas, and the Romans their denarii; which last were very near of the fame value with the drachms of the Greeks. What was the value of an Hebrew talent appears from Exodus xxxviii. 25. 26.; for there 603,550 perfons being taxed at an half shekel an head, they must have paid in the whole 301,775 shekels; and that sum is there faid to amount to 100 talents, and 1775 shekels over: if, therefore, you deduct the 1775 shekels from the number 301,775, and divide the remaining fum, i.e. 300,000, by 100, this will prove each of those talents to contain 3000 shekels. Each of these shekels weighed weighed about three shillings of our money, and 60 of them, 2 Ezekiel tells us, made a mina, and therefore 50 of those minas made a talent. And as to their drachms, it appears, by the gospel of St Matthew, that it was the fourth part of a shekel, that is, nine pence of our money: for there (chap. xvii. 24.) the tribute money annually paid to the temple by every Jew (which was b half a fnekel) is called Ai deazuor, (i. e. the two drachm piece); and therefore, if an half shekel contained two drachms, a drachm must have been the quarter part of a shekel, and every shekel must have contained four of them: and fo Josephus tells us it did; for he faith, that a shekel contained four Attic drachms; which is not exactly to be underflood according to the weight, but according to the valuation in the currency of common payments: for, according to the weight, the heaviest Attic drachms did not exceed eight pence farthing half farthing of our money, and an Hebrew drachm, as I have faid, was nine pence: but what the Attic drachm fell short of the Hebrew in weight might be made up in the fineness, and its ready currency in all countries (which last the Hebrew drachm could not have), and so might be made equivalent in common estimation among the Jews. Allowing, therefore, a drachm, as well Attic as Jewish, as valued in Judea, to be equivalent to nine pence of our money, a beka, or half thekel, will be equal to one shilling and fix pence, a shekel three shillings, a mina nine pounds, and a talent 450 pounds. So was it in the time of Moses and Ezekiel, and so was it the same, in the time of Josephus, among that people; for d he tells us, that an Hebrew mina contained two litras and an half, which comes exactly to nine pounds of our money; for a litra, being the same with a Roman libra, contained 12 ounces Troy weight, that is, 96 drachms, and therefore two litras and an half must contain 240 drachms, which being estimated at nine pence a drachm, according to the Jewish valuation, comes exactly to 60 shekels, or nine pounds of our money. And this account exactly agrees with that of Alexandria; for the Alexandrian talent contained 12,000 Attic drachms, and 12,000 Attic drachms, according to the Jewish valuation, being 12,000 of our nine pences, they amount to 450 pounds of Sterling money, which is the fame value with the Mofaic talent. But here it is to be observed, that, though the Alexandrian talent amounted to 12,000 Attic drachms, yet they themselves reckoned it but at 6000 drachms, because every Alexandrian drachm contained f two Attic drachms; and therefore, the Septuagint version being made by the Alexandrian Jews, they there render the Hebrew word shekel by the Greek Aideuxuor, which fignifieth two drachms; because two Alexandrian drachms make a shekel, two of them amounting to as much as four Attic

² Chap. xlv. 12. b Talmud in Shekalim. c Antiq. lib. 3. c. 9.

d Joseph. Antiq. lib 14. cap. 12.

Festus Pompeius, Dionysius Halicarnasseus etiam dicit, talentum Alexandrinum continere 125 libras Romanas; libræ autem Romanæ 125 continent drachmas Atticas 12,000.

f Varro æstimat drachmas Alexandrinas duplo superasse Atticasve Tyriasve.

Attic drachms; and therefore, computing the Alexandrian money according to the fame method in which we have computed the Jewith, it will be as followeth: one drachm of Alexandria will be of our money eighteen peace; one didrachm, or shekel, consisting of two drachms of Alexandria, or four of Attica, will be three shillings; one mina, confitting of 60 didrachms, or fhekels, will be nine pounds; and one talent, confifting of 30 minas, will be 450 pounds, which is the talent of a Moses, and so also it is the talent of b Josephus; for he tells us, that an Hebrew talent contained an hundred Greek (i. c. Attic) minas; for those 50 minas, which here make an Alexandrian talent, would be 100 Attic minas in the like method of valuation, the Alexandrian talent containing double as much as the Attic talent, both in the whole, and also in all its parts, in whatfoever method both shall be equally distributed. Among the Greeks, the established rule was, 6 that 100 drachms made a mina, and 60 minas a talent; but, in fome different states, their drachms being different, accordingly their minas and talents were within the fame proportion different also. But the money of Attica was the standard by which all the reft were valued, according as they more or less differed from it; and therefore, it being of most note, whereever any Greek historian speaks of talents, minas, or drachms, if they be fimply mentioned, it is always to be understood of talents, minas, or drachms, of Attica, and never of the talents, minas, or drachms, of any other place, unless it be expressed. Mr Brerewood, going by the goldsmiths weights, dreckons an Attic drachm to be the same with a dram now in use in their shops, that is, the eighth part of an ounce; and therefore lays it at the value of feven pence halfpenny of our money, or the eighth part of a crown, which is, or ought to be, an ounce weight. But Dr Bernard, going more accurately to work, e lays the middle fort of Attic drachms at eight pence farthing of our money, and the minas or talents accordingly in the proportions above mentioned. The Babylonian talent, according to Pollux, contained 7000 of those drachms. The Roman talent 8 contained 72 Italic minas, which were the fame with the Roman libras; and 96 Roman denariuses, each being of the value of leven pence halfpenny of our money, made a Roman libra. all the valuations I have hitherto mentioned must be understood only of filver money, and not of gold; for that was much higher. The proportion of gold to filver was among the ancients most commonly as ten to one; fometimes it was raifed to be as eleven to one, and fometimes as twelve, and fometimes as thirteen to one. In the time of King Edward I. it was here in England at the value of ten ^{*} Exod. xxxviii. 25. 26.

b Antiq. lib. 3. c. 7.

C Julii Pollucis Onomasticon, lib. 10. c. 6.

d In libro de Ponderibus et Pretiis Veterum Nummorum.

e In libro de Mensuris et Ponderibus Antiquis.

f Lib. 10. c 6. p. 437. E Lefins Pompeius.

ten to one; but it is now gotten at fixteen to one, and fo I value it in all the reductions which I make in this History of ancient furns to the prefent value. But, to make the whole of this matter the easier to the reader, I will lay all of it before him, for his clear view, in this following table of valuations.

An Hebrew drachm	£.	s.	ď.
Two drachms made a beka, or half shekel, which was the tribus	0	0	9 money paid by every Jew to the temple 0
Two bekas made a shekel	0	3	0
Sixty shekels made a mina	9	0	0
Fifty minas made a talent	450		c
A talent of gold, fixteen to one	7200	0	0
Attic Money, according to Mr Brerezvood.
An Attic drachm	0	0	7 E
An hundred drachms made a mina	3	2	6
Sixty minas made a talent	187	10	0
A talent of gold, fixteen to one	3000	0	3
Attic Money, according to Dr Bernard.
An Attic drachm	0	0	85
An hundred drachms made a mina	3	8	9
Sixty minas made a talent	206	5	0
A talent of gold, fixteen to one	3300	0	C
Babylonish Money, according to Mr Brerezvood.
A Babylonish talent of silver, containing 7000 Attic drachms	218	15	0
A Babylonish talent in gold, sixteen to one	3500	0	0
Babylonish Money, according to Dr Bernard.
A Babylonish talent in filver	240	12	6
A Babylonish talent in gold, sixteen to one	3850	0	0
Alexandrian Money.
A drachm of Alexandria, containing two Attic drachms, as valued by the Jews	0	I	6
A didrachm of Alexandria, containing two Alexandrian drachms	, which was an Hebrew shekel	0	3	0
Sixty didrachms, or Hebrew shekels, made a mina -	9	0	0
Fifty minas made a talent	450	0	0
A talent of gold, fixteen to one	7200	0	0
Roman Money.
Four sestertiuses made a Roman denarius	0	0	75
Ninety-fix Roman denariuses made an Italic mina, which was the fame with a Roman libra	.3	0	0
Seventy-two Roman libras made a talent	216	0	Ç.

If any defire a fuller account of the money of the ancients, he may read Mr Brerewood De Ponderibus et Pretiis veterum Nummorum, Bishop Cumberland of the Jewish Measures, Weights, and Monies, Dr Bernard De Mensuris et Ponderibus Antiquis, and others that have written of this argument. It sufficeth for my present purpose, that I here insert so much as may serve for a key to those passages in the ensuing History, where any sum of money, or any quantity of gold or silver, is mentioned.

So little mention having been made of Zoroaftres by the western writers, whether Greek or Latin, the reader may perchance be fürprifed to find so much faid of him in this History, and his time placed fo much later than is vulgarly reckoned. But, how fparingly foever the Greeks or Latins may have been in speaking of him, what hath been wanting in them hath been sufficiently supplied by the Perfians and Arabs, who have given us large accounts of him, and have placed his time where truly it was, that is, in the time of Darius Hyltaspes, king of Persia. Whatsoever we find written of him by the Arabs is taken from the Persians: for it was not till after the time of Mahomet that the Arabs had any literature among them; but the Persians had it long before: for we find in scripturea, that the Perfians had books and registers, in which all the actions of their kings, and the histories of their reigns, were carefully recorded; and Ctesias tells us the same, and that it was out of those books and registers that he extracted his history, which he wrote of the Affyrian and Persian affairs , in 23 books; and Persia being the country which was the scene of all Zoroastres's doings, there it is that we may most likely expect the best account of him. fince he was there the founder and great patriarch of the religion which was received and reigned in that country, from the time of Darius Hystaspes to the death of Yazdejerd, for near 1150 years, and confequently was among them (as he still is among the remainder of that fect) in the same esteem and veneration that Mahomet is among the Mahometans, no wonder that much hath been faid of him by their writers; and, if those writers have been as ancient as those of the Greeks and other nations, I know not why they should not have the fame authority. I acknowledge many fabulous things have crept into their writings concerning him, as there have into the Roman legends of their faints, and for the fame reason, that is, to create in vulgar minds the greater veneration for him. What I have out of the latter, I am beholden for to Dr Hyde's book, De Relia gione veterum Persarum, for I understand not the Persan language. All that could be gotten out of both these forts of writers, concerning him or his religion, that carry with it any air of truth, is here carefully laid together; as also every thing else that is faid of cither of them, by the Greeks, or any other authentic writers: and, out of all this put together is made up that account which I have given of this famous impostor. And if the life of Mahomet, which I have formerly published, be compared herewith, it will appear hereby, how much of the way, which this latter impostor took for the propagating of his fraud, had been chalked out to him by the other. Both of them were very crafty knaves: but Zoroastres being a perfon of the greatest learning of his time, and the other so wholly ignorant of it, that he could neither write nor read, he was by much the more eminent of the two, though the other hath had the greater fuccefs in the propagation of his fect: the Magians scarce having Photius in Excerptis.

^{*} Ezra iv. 15. 19. v. 17. vi. 1. 2. Efther vi, I.

b Apud Diodorum Siculu.n, lib. 2.

ever enlarged themselves beyond the present bounds of the kingdom of Persia, and some parts of Mesopotamia, Arabia, and India whereas the Mahometans have overspread a great part of the world for which they have been beholden to the prevailing power of two mighty empires erected by them, that is, that of the Saracens sirst, and next that of the Turks, who, having extended their conquests over many countries and kingdoms, have, by the power of the sword, subjugated the inhabitants to their religion, as well as to their empire.

To make this Hiftory the more clear, I have found it necessary to take in within its compass the affairs of all the other eastern nations. as well as those of the Jews, the latter not being throughly to be understood without the other: and, as far as the Grecian affairs have been complicated with those of Persia, Syria, or Egypt, I have been obliged to take notice of them also; and, without doing this, I could not lead the reader to fo clear a view of the completion of those prophecies of the Old Testament which I have in the ensuing History explained: for how could the completion of the prophecy which we have of Xerxes, and his flirring up of all against the realm of Grecia (Daniel xi. 2.), be understood, without having an account of the war which he made against Grecia? Or how could the fulfilling of the prophecies which were delivered of Alexander, his swift victories, and his breaking by them the power of Persia (Dan. vii. 6. viii. 5. 6. 21. x. 20. and xi. 3. 4.) be brought into a clear light, without laying before the reader the whole feries of those wars whereby it was effected! Or how could the verification of the prophecies concerning the four fuccesfors of Alexander, written by the fame prophet (Dan. viii. 8. and xi. 4.) be fully evidenced, without giving a thorough narrative of all those transactions and wars, whereby it was brought to pass, that the empire of that great conqueror was at length divided among four of his chief commanders? The instance given in these particulars may serve to satisfy the reader as to all the reft.

To make all things the easier to the English reader, for whom I thiefly design this work, I have carefully avoided troubling him with any exotic words in the text; and, where I have been forced, in some places, to insert Hebrew words, I have chosen, for his sake, to do it in English letters. All things else, that may be above a mere English reader, I have referred to the notes and quotations at the bottom of the page; and in them I quote every thing in English, where the English reader can examine what I quote, and there only where he cannot are the references and quotations in any other language.

Several have in Latin written, by way of annals, of the times of which I treat, as Tornicllus, Salianus, Capellus, and others. But, above all of this kind, are Archbishop Usher's Annals of the Old and New Testament, which is the exactest and most perfect work of chronology that hath been published; to which, I acknowledge, I have been much beholden; and, although I have not always concurred with him, yet I have, for the most part, especially in the ordering and fettling the years to which I refer the actions that are related: for I look on what he hath done before me herein to be the furest and safest clue I could conduct myself by, through all the intricate labyrinths of ancient times; and therefore I have generally followed him in the fixing of the years, excepting only where I saw very good reason to do otherwise. But, as to the other annalists I have mentioned, I have found it for the most part loss of time to consult them.

If I have been too large in my explication of the prophecy of Daniel's feventy weeks, or in the account which I have given of the Hebrew feriptures, or in any other difcourse of like nature, occasionally intermixed in this work, the importance of the subject must be my excuse. For the chief design of this History, and my main end in writing it, being to clear the way to the better understanding of the holy scriptures; both of the Old and the New Testament, I have thought myself obliged, in the pursuit hereof, to handle every thing to the full, as it came in my way, that might any ways tend hereto. And if the reader receiveth any benefit from it, let him give God the praise, who hath enabled me, under a very calamitous and broken state of health, to finish this first part of my design, and still to go on with my studies, for the completing of the other.

Norwich, ? Aug. 1. 1715. S

HUMPHREY PRIDEAUE.

² Diodorus Siculus, lib. 2. Athenæus, lib. 12. Herodotus, lib. 1. Juftin. lib. 1. c. 3.

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT

CONNECTED,

IN

THE HISTORY

OF

THE JEWS AND NEIGHBOURING NATIONS,

FROM

The Declension of the Kingdoms of Israel and Judah, to the Time of Christ.

BOOK I.

HE ancient empire of the Affyrians, which had governed Afia for above thirteen hundred years, being diffolved on the death of Sardanapalus, there Anno 747° arose up a two empires in its stead; the one founded by Arbaces, governor of Media, and the other by Belesis, governor of Babylon, who were the two principal commanders that headed the conspiracy, whereby the former empire was brought to an end; which they having, on their success, parted among themselves, Belesis had Babylon, Chaldea, and Arabia, and Arbaces all the rest. This happened in the seventh year after the building of Rome, and in the second year of the eighth Olympiad, which was the seven hundred and forty-seventh year before Christ, i. e. before the beginning of the vulgar æra, by which we now compute the years from his incarnation.

Vol. I. A Arbaces

a Diodorus Siculus, lib. 2. Athenæus, lib. 12. Herodotus, lib. 10. Justin. lib. 1. c. 3.

Arbaces is in feripture called a Tiglath-Pilefer and b Thilgath-Pilnefer; in c Elian, Thilgamus; and by d Castor, Ninus junior. He fixed his royal feat at Nineveh, the same place where the former Assyrian kings had their residence, and there he governed his new crecked empire nineteen years.

Belefis is the fame with Nabonasser, from the beginning of whose reign at Babylon commenceth the samous astronomical æra, from him called the æra of Nabonasser. He is by e Nicolas Damascenus called Nanibrus, and in the holy scripture Baladan, being the father of Merodac or Mordac-Empadus, who sent an embassy to King Hezekiah, to congratulate him on his recovery from his sickness; which will be hereaster spoken of.

And these two empires God was pleased to raise up to be his inflruments in their turns to punish the iniquities of his own people; the sirst for the overthrowing of the kingdom of Israel, and the other for the overthrowing of the kingdom of Judah;

as shall be shewn in the sequel of this history.

In the fixth year of Tiglath-Pilefer 8, Ahaz began to reign over Judah; who being a very wicked and impious An. 742.

Ahaz 1. prince, God flirred up against him Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel, who, confederating together, invaded his land with a great army, and, having harassed it all over, pent him up in Jerusalem, and there besieged him.

Their defign was b, on the taking of that city, to have wholly extirpated the house of David, and to have fet up a new king over Judah, the fon of Tabeal. Who this person was, is no where said in scripture; but he seemeth to have been some potent and sactions Jew, who, having revolted from his master, the king of Judah, excited and stirred up this war against him, out of an ambitious aim of plucking him down from his throne, and reigning in his flead.

But it being the will of God only to punish Ahaz for his wickedness, and not the whole family of David, for which he had always, for the sake of David, expressed mercy and savour, he was pleased to prevent the mischief, by blasting the whole design; and therefore he sent the prophet Isaiah unto Ahaz, to encourage him valiantly to withstand the enemy in the defence of the city, and to assure him that they should not prevail against him; and for this he gave him two signs, the one to be accomplished speedily, and the other some ages after.

The

a 2 Kings xv. 29. & xxvi. 7. 10.

b i Chron. v. 6. 2 Chr. xxviii. 20.

c Hitt. Animal. lib. 12. c. 21.

Luseb, Chron. p. 46.

^{&#}x27; In Eclogis Valesii, p. 426, &c.

f Ifaiah xxx x. 1.

g 2 Kings xvi. 2 Chron. xxviii.

The first was, that the prophet should take him a wife, who should immediately on that marriage conceive a son, and that, before that son should be of age to discern between good and evil, both these kings should be cut off from the land; which accordingly came to pass: For the prophet a immediately after taking a wife, before Maher-shalal-hash-baz, the son born to him of that marriage, arrived at the age of discerning between good and evil, both these kings were slain; Rezin in the third year of Ahaz, and Pekah the next year after.

The other fign was, that be a virgin fhould conceive, and bear a fon, who should be called Emmanuel, that is, God with us, the Messias that was promised, God manifested in our nature, and for a while here dwelling with us to accomplish the great work of our falvation. Which prophecy was then delivered to comfort and support the drooping and desponding spirits of the house of David; who seeing so great a force armed against them, and intending their destruction, were under terrible apprehensions, as if their utter extirpation were then at hand. From which despair this prophecy sully relieved them, in affuring them, that their house should stand, and continue, till this prediction should be accomplished, and the Messias born of their race, in such manner as was hereby foretold.

After this, the two kings, according to the words of the prophet, failing of their defign, were forced to raife the fiege, and return home, without prevailing in the enterprise which they had undertaken.

But c Ahaz, after this, instead of being reformed by the mercy, growing more wicked and perverse than before, in ab-

folutely rejecting the God of Ifrael, and cleaving to the worst abominations of the heathen nations round him, even to the making of his sons pass through the fire to Molech; the next year after, ^a God brought again upon him the fame two confederated kings, from whom he had delivered him the former year, who, coming with forces better appointed, and councils better concerted than before, divided themselves into three armies; the first under Rezin, king of Syria, the second under Pekah, king of Ifrael, and the third under Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim; and with these three armies, the more to distract him, they invaded him in three different parts of his kingdom at the same time. Rezin, in his ravage, having loaded his army with spoils, and taken a vast number of captives, returned with them to Darnascus, thinking it his best.

a Ifaiah viii.

⁶ Maiah vii. 14. Matth. 1. 23.

^{° 2} Chron. xxviii 2-g.

d 2 Kings xvi. 2 Chron xxviii, best interest there to secure what he had gotten. Pekah with his army marched directly against Ahaz, who had got together the main strength of his kingdom to oppose this invasion, and thereby for some time did put a stop to the progress of this part of the enemies forces; but at length, being encouraged by the departure of Rezin to give them battle, he was overthrown with a most terrible destruction, an hundred and twenty thousand of his men being flain in that day. Of which blow Zichri taking the advantage, led his forces to Jerusalem, and took the royal city, where he flew Maafeiah the king's fon, and most of the chief governors and great men of the kingdom, whom he found there. And both these armies of Hrael, on their return, carried with them vast spoils, and above two hundred thousand persons, whom they had taken captive, with intention to have fold them for bond men and bond women. But a prophet from God having feverely rebuked them for this their excessive cruelty against their brethren, whom God had delivered into their hands, the elders of the land, fearing the like wrath upon themselves for the punishment hereof, would not permit them to bring the captives to Samaria; whereon they were clothed, and relieved out of the spoils, and again fent back unto their own homes.

And the land was no fooner delivered from these enemies, but it was again invaded by others, who treated it with An. 740. Ahaz 3. flines, who next bordered on it, the former on the south, and the other on the west, seeing Judah brought thus low, took the advantage to seize on those parts which lay next unto them, and, by ravages and inroads, did all the mischief to the rest that lay in their power.

But Ahaz, continuing fill hardened in his iniquity, notwithflanding all this which he had fuffered for the punishment of it, would not feek the Lord his God, or return unto him from his evil ways, but putting his confidence rather in man, pillaged the temple of all the gold and filver that was found therein, and fent it to Tiglath-Pilefer, king of Affyria, to engage him to come to his affiftance against his enemies, promising thereon to become his fervant, and pay tribute unto him.

The king of Affyria, having an opportunity hereby offered unto him of adding Syria and Palestine to his empire, readily laid hold of the invitation, and marched with a great army into those parts; where, having slain Rezin in battle, he took Damascus, and reduced all that country under his dominion; and hereby he put an end to the kingdom of the Syrians in Damascus, after it had lasted there for ten generations, that is, from from the time of Rezon, the fon of Eliadah, who first founded it, while Solomon was king over Ifrael.

After this, Tiglath-Pilefer b marched against Pekah, and feized all that belonged to Ifrael beyond Jordan, and also all the land of Galilee, and then went forward towards Jerufalem, but rather to get more money of Ahan, than to afford him any real help; for he affifted him not for the recovery of any of those places which had been taken from him during the war, either by the Philistines, Edomites, or other enemics, but when he had got from him all that he could (for the raifing of which Ahaz cut the veffels of the temple into pieces, and melted them down), he marched back to Damascus, and there wintered, without doing any thing more for him; fo that, in reality, he was rather distressed, than any way helped by this alliance, the land being almost as much exhausted by the presents and subsidies, which were extorted from him by this his pretended friend and ally, as it was by the ravages and pillages of his open cnemies. And, moreover, two lasting mischiefs followed hereon: For, 1 ft, Instead of two petty princes, whom he had afore for his neighbours, and with either of which he was well able to cope, he had now this mighty king for his borderer, against whom no power of the land was fufficient to make any relistance; and the ill effect hereof both Ifrael and Judah did afterwards fusficiently feel; for it became at length to both of them the cause of their destruction. 2dly, From this time the Jews were excluded all their traffic into the Southern fea, which had hitherto been one of the chiefest foundations of their riches.

This they had long carried on through the Red fea, and the firaits of Babelmandel, not only to the coasts of Africa on the west, but also to those of Arabia, Persia, and India, on the east, and reaped a prodigious profit from it. King David was the first o who began it; for having d conquered the kingdom of Edom, and reduced it to be a province of his empire, he thereby became master of two sea-port towns on the Red sea, Elath and Effon-geber e, which then belonged to that kingdom; and, feeing the advantage which might be made of the fituation of these two places, he wisely took the benefit of it, and there begun this traffic. There are two places mentioned in fcripture, to which it was from thence carried on, that is, Ophir and Tarshish. From the former of these David in his time drew great profit; for the three thousand talents of gold of Ophir, which he is faid (I Chron.

^a 1 Kings xi. 23—25. b 2 Kings xvi. 2 Chron. xxviii.

Eupolemus apud Eufeb. Præp. Evang. lib. 9.

^{4 2} Sam. viii. 14. 1 Kings xi. 15. 16. 1 Chron. xviii. 13.

¹ Kings ix. 26. 2 Chron. viii. 17.

tifying

(1 Chron. xxix. 4.) to have given to the house of God, seem to be of that gold of Ophir, which he himfelf had by his fleets in feveral voyages brought to him from thence: for what he had referved for this work out of the spoils of war, the tributes of the conquered nations, and the public revenues of his kingdom, is before mentioned (c. xxiv. 14.) and amounted to a a prodigious fum. The three thousand talents of the gold of Ophir, which he added, was over and above this, and out of his own proper goods, or private estate, which he had besides what belonged to him as a king. And how he could increase that so far, as out of that only to be able to give so great a sum, can fcarce any other way be accounted for, than by the great returns, which were made him from this traffic: for the gold alone amounted to b above one and twenty millions of our money, belides the feven thousand talents of refined c filver, which were included in the fame gift. After David d Solomon carried on the fame traffic to Ophir, and had from thence in one voyage e four hundred and fifty talents of gold. And if Solomon got so much in one voyage, well might David have gained the fum above mentioned, in the feveral voyages which were made thither for him, from the time that he had fubdued the land of Edom, to the time of his death, which was at least twenty-five years. But it must be acknowledged, that Solomon much improved this trade, not only by his greater wifdom, but also by his great application to all the bufinefs of it. For, not being perplexed and incumbered with such wars, as his father David was, he had more leifure to attend thereto. And therefore, for the better fettling of it, he went f in person to Elath and Estongeber, and there took care by his own inspection for the building of his ships, the for-

^a This fum is so prodigious, as gives reaf in to think that the talents, whereby that fum is reckoned were another fort of talents of a far less while than the Mosaic talents, of which an account is given in the Prefice For what is faid to be given by David (I Chron. xxii. 14-16. & xxix. 3-5.) and contributed by his princes (xxix. 6-8.) toward the building of the temple at Jernialem, if valued by these talents, exceeded the value of eight hundred millions of our money, which was enough wherewith to have built all that temple of folid filver.

b For three thousand Hebrew talents of gold, reduced to our money, amount to twenty-one millions and fix hundred thousand pounds Ster-

¹ Chron. maix. 4.

d I Kings ix. 26—22. & x. 11. 22. 2 Chron, viii. 17. 18. & x. 1c—21.
c 2 Chron, viii. 18. The 450 talents here mentioned amount to three millions two hundred and forty thousand pounds of our present

Sterling money. : 2 Chron. viii. 17.

tifying of both those ports, and the settling of every thing else, which might tend to the fuccessful carrying on of this traffic, not only to Ophir, but to all other parts, where the fea, on which these ports lay, opened a passage. But his chiefest care was to plant those two towns with such inhabitants, as might be left able to ferve him in this defign. For which purpose he brought thither from the fea-coasts of Palestine as many as he could get of those who had been there used to the sea, especially of the Tyriansa, whom his friend and ally triram, king of Tyre, from thence furnished him with in great numbers; and these were the most useful to him in this affair; for they being in those days, and for many ages after, the most skilful of all others in sea affairs, they were the best able to navigate his ships, and conduct his fleets, through long voyages. But the use of the compass not being then known, the way of navigation was in those times only by coasling, which often made a voyage to be of three years, which now may be finished almost in three months. However this trade fucceeded fo far, and grew to fo high a pitch, under the wife management of Sclomon, that thereby he drew to these two ports, and from thence to Jernfalem, all the trade of Africa, Arabia, Perfia, and India, which was the chief fountain of those immense riches, which he acquired, and b whereby he exceeded all the kings of the earth in his time, as much as he did by his wifdom; to that ' he made filver to be at Jerufalem, as the stones of the street, by reason of the great plenty with which it there abounded during his reign. After the division of the kingdom, Edom being of that part which remained to the house of David, they still continued to carry on this trade from d those two ports, especially from Eslongeber, which they chiefly made use of till the time of Jehosaphat. But he having there loft his fleet, which he had prepared to fail from thence to Ophir in partnership with Ahaziah, king of Israel, this spoiled the credit of that harbour. For there being night he mouth of it a ridge of rocks, as this feet was pailing out of the port, they were by a fudden guft of wind, which God fent on purpose for the punishment of this consederacy, driven upon those rocks where f they were all broken to pieces and loft. And therefore, for the avoiding of the like mischief for the future, the

A 4

^a 1 Kings ix. 27. 2 Chron, viii. 18. & ix. 10. 21.

b 1 Kings x. 23. 2 Chron. ix. 22. 1 Kings x. 27. 2 Chron. ix. 27.

d I Kings xxii. 48. 2 Chron. xx. 36.

Elecanic of these rocks it had the name of Essengeber, which signified the back-bone of a man, for these rocks resembled it.

1. Kings xxii, 48. 2 Chron. xx. 36. 37.

the station of the king's ships was thenceforth removed to Elath, from whence Jehosaphat, the next year after, sent out another fleet for the same place. For whereas it is said, that he lost the first fleet for confederating with the idolatrous king of Israel, and we are told a in another place of his fending forth a fleet for Ophir, in which he would not permit Ahaziah to have any partnership with him. This plainly proves the sending out of two fleets by Jehosaphat, the first in partnership with Ahaziah, and the other without it. And thus this affair was carried on from the time of David till the death of Jehosaphat. For till then the land of Edom b was all in the hands of the kings of Judah, and was wholly governed by a deputy or viceroy there placed by them. But when Jehoram fucceeded Jehosaphat, and God, for the punishment of the exceeding great wickedness of that prince had withdrawn his protection from him, Efau, according to the prophecy of Isaac c did break the yoke of Jacob from off his neck, after having ferved him (as foretold by that prophecy) for several generations, that is, from the time of David till then. For, on Jehoram's having revolted from God d, the Edomites revolted from him, and having expelled his viceroy, chose them a king of their own, and under his conduct recovered their ancient liberty, and were not after that any more subject to the kings of Judah. And from this time the Jewish traffic through the Red sea had an interruption, till the reign of Uzziah. But he, in the very beginning of his reign, having e recovered Elath again to Judah, fortified it anew, and, having driven out the Edomites, planted it again with his own people, and there renewed their old traffic; which was from thence carried on and continued till the reign of Ahaz. But then Rezin, king of Damascus, having, in conjuction with Pekah, king of Ifrael, oppressed and weakened Judalt to that degree which I have mentioned, he took the advantage of it to feize Elath, and, driving fout the Jews from thence, planted it with Syrians, purposing thereby to draw to himself the whole profit of that traffic of the Southern feas, which the kings of Judah had hitherto reaped, by having that port. But the next year after Tiglath-Pilefer having conquered Rezin, and fubdued the kingdom of Damaseus, he seized with it Elath, as then belonging to his new conquest, and without having any regard to his friend and ally king Ahaz, or the just claim which he had thereto, kept it ever after, and thereby put an end to all that great profit, which the Jows till then had reaped

² r Kings xxii. 49.

b i Kings xxii. 47. Gen. xxvii. 40.

d 2 Kings viii. 20 22.

c 2 Kirgs xiv. 22. 2 Chron. xxvi. 2.

f 2 Kings xvi. 6.

reaped from this traffic, and transferred it to the Syrians, which became a great diminution of their wealth: for although they did not always carry it on with the same full gales of prosperity. as in the time of King Solomon, yet it was constantly, as long as they had it, of very great advantage to them; for it included all the trade of India, Perlia, Africa, and Arabia, which was carried on through the Red fea. But, after Rezin had thus dispossessed them of it, they never had it any more restored to them, but were ever after wholly excluded from it. From thenceforth all the merchandise that came that way, instead of being brought to Jerusalem, was carried elsewhere; but at what place the Syrians fixed their principal mart for it, while it was in their hands, is no where faid. But at length we find the whole of this trade ingroffed by the Tyrians, who, managing it from the same port, made it, by the way a of Rhinecorura (a fea-port town lying between the confines of Egypt and Palestine), center all at Tyre, and from thence they furnithed all the western parts of the world with the wares of Persia, India, Africa, and Arabia, which thus by the way of the Red fea they traded to; and hereby they exceedingly enriched themselves during the Persian empire, under the favour and protection of whose kings they had they full possession of this But when the Ptolemies prevailed in Egypt, they did, by building b Berenice, Myos-Hormos, and other ports on the Egyptian or western side of the Red sea (for Elath and Essongeber lay on the eastern), and by fending forth fleets from thence to all those countries, to which the Tyrians traded from Elath, foon drew all this trade into that kingdom, and there fixed the chief mart of it at Alexandria c, which was thereby made the greatest mart in the world, and there it continued for a great many ages after, and all the traffic, which the western parts of the world from that time had with Persia, India, Arabia, and the eastern coasts of Africa, was wholly carried on through the Red fea, and the mouth of the Nile, till a way was found d, a little above two hundred years fince, of failing to those parts by the way of the Cape of Good Hope. After this, the Portuguese for some time managed this trade; but now it is in a nanner wholly get into the hands of the English and Dutch. And this is a full account of the East India trade, from the time it was first begun by David and Solomon, to our present age.

But though it be by all agreed, that the trade to Ophir and Tarshish was the same that is now in the hands of our East India merchants, yet there are great disputes among learned men in a Strabo, 15.16.

Strabo, lib. 17. p. 798.

L Strabo, lib. 17.

d A. D. 1497.

in what parts of the eaftern world thefe two places lay. Some will have Ophir to have been the island of Zocatora, which lies on the eastern coasts of Africa, a little without the straits of Babelmandel. Others will have it to be the island anciently called Taprobana, now Ceylon; and, for its being an island, they have the authority of Eupolemus (an ancient author quoted by Eusebius) on their side: for speaking of David, he faith of him a, 'That he built ships at Elath, a city of Arabia, and from thence fent metal-men to the island of Urphe, or Ophir, fituated in the Red fee, which was fruitful in yielding abundance of gold, and the metal-men brought it from thence to Judea.' But this being a question no way to be decided but from the scriptures, all that is to be observed from thence is, If, That from Elath to Tarshish was a voyage b of three years, going and coming: but in what compals of time the voyage to Ophir was completed is not faid; and that therefore Tarshish might be fomewhere in the East Indies, but Ophir might be anywhere nearer home within the reach of those seas. 2dly, That the commodities brought from Tarthilh were " gold, and filver, and ivory, and apes, and peacocks;" and those of Ophir " were gold, and almug trees, and precious stones." And therefore any place in the Southern or great Indian fea, at the distance of a then three years voyage from Elath, which can best furnish the merchants with gold, filver, ivory, apes, and peacocks, may be gueffed to be the Tarshish of the holy fcriptures; and any place within the compass of the same Southern fea, that can best furnish them with gold, almug trees, and precious stones, and in that quantity of gold as Solomon brought home in one voyage, may be gueffed to be the Ophir in the faid holy scriptures mentioned. Only thus much I cannot forbear to fay, that if the fouthern part of Arabia did furnish the world in those times e with the best gold, and in the greatest quantity, as good authors fay, they that would have the Ophir of the holy feriptures to be there fituated, feem, of all others, to have the best soundation for their conjecture. But more than conjecture no one can have in this matter.

But,

³ Apud Eufeb, Priep. Evang. lib. 9.

b r Lings x. 22. 2 Chron. iz. 21.

d I Kings X. 22.

Agathacides, (p. 60. edit. Oxon.), tells us, that the Alileans and Caffandtins, in the fouthern parts of Arabia, had gold in that plenty among them, that they would give double the weight of gold for iron, triple its weight for brafs, and ten times its weight for filter, and that, if digging the carth, they found it in gobbets of pure gold, which needed no refining, and that the leaft of them were as big as olive flones, but others much larger. No other author fpeaks of any other place in proorld where it was ever found in the like plenty.

But, for the better understanding of what Eupolemus above faith of Ophir, 'that it was an island in the Red fea,' it is proper here to take notice, that he doth not there mean the Arabian gulf, which lieth between Arabia and Egypt, and is now commonly called the Red fea; but a the great Southern ocean, which, extending itself between India and Africa, washeth up to the coast of Arabia and Persia, where it appearing of a reddish colour, by reason of the fierceness of the sun-beams constantly beating upon it in that hot climate, it was therefore called the Red fea; and this alone was that which was truly and properly called fo by the ancients: for the Arabian gulf, which hath now obtained that name, was never for any fuch redness of it so called; for neither the water (as some will have it) nor the fand (as others fay) hath there any appearance of that colour, nor was it ever by any of the eafterns formerly fo called. Throughout the whole scripture of the Old Testament b it is called Yam Suph, that is, the Weedy Sea, by reason of the great quantity of sea-weed which is therein; and the same name it also hath in the ancient Syriac version, as well as in the Targum or Chaldee paraphrases. But, among the ancient inhabitants of the countries adjoining, it was called Yam Edom, i.e. the Sea of Edom: for the fons of Edom having possessed all that country, which, lying between the Red fea and the lake of Sodom, was by the Greeks called Arabia Petrea, they then named it, from their father Edom, the land of Edom; and because that which we now call the Red fea washed upon it, thence it was called the fea of Edom, or, in the dialect of the Greeks, the Edomean or Idamean fea, in the fame manner as that which washeth upon Pamphylia was called the Pamphylian fea, and that which watheth upon Tyrrhenia the Tyrrhenian fea, and fo in abundance of other inflances. But the Greeks, who took this name from the Phoenicians, finding it by them to be called Yam Edom, instead of rendering it the sea of Edom, or the Idunean sea, as they ought, miftook the word Edom to be an appellative inthead of a proper name; and therefore rendered it igote a hanassa, that is, the Red fea; for Edom, in the language of that country fignified red; and it is faid in feripture, that Efau c having fold his birth-right to his brother Jacob for a mels of red pottage, he was for that reason called Edom, that is, the Ked. And Strabo d, Pliny , Mela f, and others f, fay, that this fea

Cen. xxv. 3c.

Dionyfii Periegens, v. 38. & Comment. Euftathii in eundem. Strabo, lib. 16. p. 765. Agathemeri Geographia, lib. 2. c. 11.

P See Exod. x. 19. xiii 18. &c.

d Lib. 16. p. 766.

Lib. 6. c. 23. f Lib. 3. c. 8.

B Agatharcides, edit. Ox. p. 2. Q. Curtius, lib. 8. c. 9. & lib. 10. c. r. Thiloftratus, lib. 3. c. 15. Ar-was called fo, not from any redness that was in it, but from a great king, called Erythrus, who reigned in the country adjoining upon it; which name Erythrus, fignifying the same in Greek that Edom did in the Phænician and Hebrew languages. that is, the red, this plainly proves, that the great king Erythrus could be none other than Edom, who having planted his posterity in the country, as I have said a, from him it was called the land of Edom, or, with a Greek termination, Edomea, or Idumea, and from that land the fea which washed upon it was called the fea of Edom; but the Greeks translating Edom as an appellative into the word red, which it fignified, instead of rendering it in the same sound, as a proper name; from this mistake it was by them called the Red sea, and that name it hath retained ever fince.

But fully to clear what hath been above faid, it is necessary Earther to observe, that the Idumea mentioned by Strabo, Jofephus, Pliny, Ptolemy, and other ancient writers, was not that land of Edom, or Idumea, which gave name to the Red fea, but another ancient Idumea, which was vastly larger than that Idumea which those authors describe; for b it included all that land, which was afterwards, from Petra, the metropolis of it, called Arabia Petrea: for all this was inhabited by the fons of Edom, and from thence it was anciently called the land of Edom. But, e on a fedition which arose among them, a party going off from the rest, while the land of Judea lay desolate during the Babylonish captivity, they planted themselves on the fouth-western part of that country, where they were called Idumeans; and that land alone which they there possessed was the Idumea which those authors mention. Those who remained behind, joining themselves to the Ishmaelites, were, from Nebaioth, or Nabath, the d fon of Ishmael, called Nabathæans, and the country which they possessed Nabathea; and by that name we often hear of them in the ancient Greek and Latin writers.

But to return from whence I have digreffed, An. 739. Aliaz, having gone fo far with Tiglath-Pilefer, as hath Ahaz 4. been faid, found it necessary for him to overlook all injuries to avoid provoking greater; and therefore, carrying on the compliment towards him as if he had really been that friend rianus in Rerum Indicarum libro,

p. 579, edit. Blanc.

See Fuller's Mifcellanies, lib. A. C. 20.

b That it reached to the Red fea appears from 2 Chron. viii. 17. for Elath and Efiongeber, cities of Edom, were ports on the Red fea.

Strabo, lib. 16. p. 760.

[¢] Gen. xxv. 13.

and protector, which he pretended to be as foon as he heard that he was returned to Damascus, a he went thither to him, to pay him that respect and obeisance, which, after having owned him as his protector and sovereign, he did now, as his elient and tributary, owe unto him.

While he was at Damascus on this occasion, b he saw there an idolatrous altar, of a form which he was much pleafed with: whereupon, cauting a pattern of it to be taken, he fent it to Urijah, the high priest, at Jerusalem, to have another there made like unto it; and, on his return, having removed the altar of the Lord out of its place in the temple, ordered this new altar to be fet up in its flead; and thenceforth giving himfelf wholly up to idolatry c, instead of the God of Israel, he worshipped the gods of the Syrians, and the gods of the other nations round him, faying, that they helped their people, and that therefore he would worship them, that they might help him And accordingly, having filled Jerusalem and all Judea with their idols and their altars, he would fuffer no other god, but them only, to be worshipped in the land; whereby, having excluded the only true God, the Lord his Creator, whom alone he ought to have adored, he caused his temple to be shut up. and utterly suppressed his worship throughout all his kingdom. And this he did with an air and profession of anger and denance, for that he had not delivered him in his diffres, when the Syrians and Ifraelites came against him, as if it were in his power to revenge himfelf upon the Almighty, and execute his wrath upon him that made him; to fuch an extravagant height of folly and madnefs had his impiety carried him beyond all that had reigned before him in Jerusalem; and in this he continued, till at length he perished in it, being cut off in the flower of his age, before he had outlived half his days.

Tiglath-Pilefer, on his return into Affyria, carried with him great numbers of the people, whom he had taken captive in the kingdom of Damascus, and in the land of Israel. Those of Damascus he planted d in Kir, and those of Israel in Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and on the river Gozan in the land of the Medes. Kir was a city in the hither part of Media; but Halah, Habor, Hara, and the river Gozan, were farther remote. And herein was accomplished the prophecy of the prophet Amos f against Israel, wherein he foretold, in the days of Uzziah, the grandfather of Ahaz, that God would cause them to go into captivity beyond Damascus, that is, unto places beyond.

^a 2 Kings xvi. 10.

b 2 Kings xvi. 10-16.

c 2 Kings xvi. 2 Ci ron. xxviii. 22-25,

d 2 Kings xvi. 9.

e 1 Chron. v. 26.

f Amos v. 25, 27.

beyond where those of Damascus should be carried. St Stephen a, quoting this prophecy, renders it beyond Babylon. So the common editions of the Greek Testament have it, and it is certainly true; for what was beyond Kir was also beyond Babylon, for Kir was beyond Babylon: But Wicelius's bedition bath Damascus in St Stephen's speech also, and, no doubt, he had ancient copies which he followed herein.

The planting of the colonies by Tiglath-Pilefer in those cities of the Medes plainly proves Media to have been then under the king of Astyria: For, otherwise, what had he to do to plant colonies in that country: And therefore Tiglath-Pilefer and Arbaces were not two distinct kings, whereof one had Media, and the other Astyria, as a Archbishop Usher supposeth, but must both be the same person expressed under these two distinct names. And d Diodorus Siculus positively tells us, that Arbaces had Astyria, as well as Media, for his share in the partition of the former empire; and therefore there is no room for a Tiglath-Pilefer, or a Ninus junior, distinct from him, to reign in Astyria during his time, but it must necessarily be one and the same person, that was signified by all these different names.

Pekah, by this conquest which the Assyrians made upon him, being stript of so large a part of his kingdom, was hereby brought lower than he had afore brought King Ahaz. For he had now scarce any thing lest, but the city of Samaria, and the territories of the tribe of Ephraim, and the half tribe of Manasseh only; which bringing him into contempt with his people, as well as raising their indignation against him (as is commonly the case of unfortunate princes) Hoshea, the son of Elah, rose up against him, and slew him, after he had reigned in Samaria twenty years; and hereby was fully accomplished that prophecy of Isaiah sconcerning him, which is above related. After this the elders of the land seem to have taken the government into their hands; for Hoshea had not the kingdom till nine years after, that is, towards the end of the twelsth year of Ahaz.

An. 629.
Ahaz 14.
And Salmanefer, his fon, (who in h Tobit is called Enemeffer, and in h Hofea, Shalmon), reigned in his flead.
And, as foon as he was fettled in the throne, he came into Syria a Λ&s vii. 43.

h See Dr Mill's Greek Testament,

Acts vii. 43.

^c Annales Veteris Testamenti sab anno Mundi 3257.

d Lib. 2.

e 2 Kings xv. 30.

[!] Ifa. vii. 16.

⁸ Caftor apud Euseb. Chron. p. 46.

h Chap. i. 2.

i Chap. 3, 14.

ria and Palestine, and there subjected Samaria to his dominion. making Hoshea, the king thereof, to become his vasfal, and pare tribute unto him. In this expedition, among other prey which he took and carried away with him a, was the golden calf, which Jeroboam had fet up in Bethel, and had been there, ever fince his time, worshipped by the ten tribes of Ifrael, that had revolted with him from the house of David. The other golden calf, which was at the same time set up by him in Dan, had been taken thence b, about ten years before, by Tiglath-Pilefer, in the invafion which he then made upon Galilee, in which province that city flood. And therefore the apostate Ifraelites, being now deprived of the idols which they had fo long worthipped, began again to return to the Lord their God, and to go up to Jerusalem there to worship before him; and Hosheah encouraged them herein. For whereas of the kings of Ifrael had hitherto maintained guards upon the frontiers to hinder all under their subjection from going up to Jerusalem to worship there, Hoshea took away those guards, and gave free liberty to all to worship the Lord their God according to his laws, in that place, which he had chosen; and therefore when Hezekiah invited all Ifrael, that is, all those of the ten revolted tribes, as well as the other two, to come up to his passover, Hoshea hindered them not d, but permitted all that would to go up thereto. And when those of his subjects, who were at that festival, did, on their return, out of their zeal for the true worship of their God e, break in pieces the images, cut down the groves, demolish the high places, and absolutely deflroyed all other monuments of idolatry throughout the whole kingdom of Samaria, as will be hereafter related, Hoshea forbade them not, but in all likelihood gave his confent to it, and concurred with them herein. For he being king, without his encouraging it, and giving his authority for it, it could not have been done. And therefore he hath, as to religion, the best character given him in scripture of all that reigned before him over Ifrael from the division of the kingdom. For although, he were not perfect in the true worship of God, and therefore it is faid of him f, That "he did evil in the fight of the Lord," yet it is fubjoined, in the next words, "but not fo as the kings of Ifrael which were before him." By which it appears, that his ways were less offensive to God, than were the ways of any of those that had reigned before him in that kingdom. However, still he was far from being perfectly righteous, which this alone fufficiently

^a Seder Olam Rabba, c. xxii.

^{1 2} Kings xvii.

Seder Olam Rabba, c. xxii.

d 2 Chron. xxx. 10. 18.

e 2 Chron. xxxi. 1.

f 2 Chron. xxvii. 2, fufficiently proves, that he treacherously slew his master to reign in his flead.

Ahaz, in the 16th year of his reign, being smitten of God for his iniquities, a died in the thirty-fixth year An. 727. Ahaz of his age, and was buried in the city of Da-16. Hezek. 1. vid, but not with a royal burial, in the fepulchres of the kings. For, from this honour he was excluded, because of his wicked reign, as were Jehoram and Joash before him, and Manasseh and Ammon after him, for the same reason; it being the usage of the Jews to lay this mark of infamy upon those that reigned wickedly over them.

After Ahaz, reigned b Hezekiah his fon, a very worthy and He had, in the last year of his father's religious prince. reign, been admitted a partner with him in the kingdom, while he was languishing (as it may be supposed) under the sickness of which he died. However, as long as his father lived he could make no alteration in that evil course of affairs, which he had put both church and state into. But, as soon as he was dead, and Hezekiah had the whole power in his hands, he immediately fet himfelf with all his might to work a thorough reformation on both.

The first thing which he did, was, to open the house of God, which his father had impioufly thut up, and restore An. 726. the true worship therein; in order whereto he called the priefts and Levites together, out of all parts of the land, to attend their duty in the temple, ordering them to remove his father's new altar, and to restore the altar of the Lord to its place again, and purge the temple of all other pollutions, with which it had been profaned, during the reign of his father. But it not being, till the end of the former year, that Ahaz died, the beginning of the first month of the ensuing year, (which is called Nifan, and corresponds partly with March, and partly with April, in our kalendar), was the foonest that they could be employed in this work; fo that it not being completed till the 16th day of that month, the passover could not be kept that year in its regular time, which ought to have been begun on the 14th day of the faid month of Nifan.

However, the house of the Lord being now fanctified, and made fit for the fervice of God, Hezekiah went up thither on the 17th day of that month, with the rulers and great men of his kingdom, where, the people being gathered together, he offered fin-offerings for the kingdom, and the fanctuary, and for Judah, to make atonement to God for them, and for all Ifrael; and after that he offered peace-offerings, and in all other particulars reflored the fervice of God in the fame manner as it had been performed in the pureft times, that had been before him; and there was great joy among all the good people of the land thereon.

² Kings xvi, 20, 2 Chron-xxviii. 27, b 2 Kings xviii. 2 Chron: xxix:

And feeing the paffover could not be kept on the regular time this year, because neither the temple, nor the priests, nor the people, were fanctified in order hereto, and in this case a the law of Moses allowed a second passover to be kept from the 14th day of the fecond month; King Hezekiah, having taken counfel hereon with the chief priefts, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, b decreed, that this second passover should be kept by all the congregation of Israel, instead of the first; and accordingly he sent messengers to carry notice hereof, not only through all Judah, but also through all the other tribes of Ifrael, and to invite all that were of Ifrael, to come to it. And accordingly, on the day appointed, there was at Jerufalem a very great concourse of people from all parts met together to solemnife the holy festival, and that as well from those tribes that had separated from the house of David, as from those who had fluck to it; for although many of Ephraim and Manaffeh, and the rest of those tribes, laughed at Hezekiah's messengers, when they invited them to this folemnity, because of the impious contempt which through long diftifage they had contracted of it; yet a great multitude, even from those parts, came to it, and very religiously joined in the observance of it, whereby it became the greatest passover that had been solemnised at Jerusalem fince the days of King Solomon. And, because they had long neglected the observance of this solemn sestival, to make some amends for it, they now doubled the time of its continuance; for, whereas the law directs it to be observed only feven days, they kept it fourteen, with much joy and gladness of heart; and, resolving from thenceforth to serve the God of Ifrael only, as foon as the folemnity was ended, they went out into all the coasts of Judah and Benjamin, and brake the images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars, and absolutely destroyed all the monuments of idolatry which were any where to be found, either in Jerusalem, Judea, or any of the coasts belonging thereto. And those of the other tribes, on their return home, did the same in all the rest of Israel; so that the true worship of God was again univerfally restored throughout all the land, and they might have received a bleffing proportionable hereto, had they with the fame zeal perfilled in it.

And the brazen ferpent, which Mofes had fet up in the wilderness, having been by many, in the preceding times of ini-Vol. I. B quity;

^{*} Numb. is. 10-11-

b 2 Chron. XXX.

quity, made the object of idolatrous worship 2, Hezekials caused this also to be destroyed; whereas, otherwise, it might have ferved, as well as the pot of manna, and Aaron's rode to have been a monument of the miraculous mercy of God shewn to his people on their coming out of Egypt, and for this reason it seems to have been so long preserved.

But, notwithstanding it is thus positively said in the holy fcripture, that the brazen ferpent was destroyed by Hezekiah in the manner as I have related; yet the impudence of the Romanists is fuch b, that in the church of St Ambrose at Milan, they now keep and shew to their Devoto's a brazen serpent, which they pretend to be the very same that Moses did fet up in the wilderness; and, upon this belief, an idolatrous devotion is there paid to it, as gross as was that of the Jews, for which Hezekiah caused it to be destroyed. But it must not be denied, that, among their learned men, there are those who acknowledge the cheat, and disclaim it.

About the beginning of the reign of Hezekiah c, Sabacon, the Ethiopian, having invaded Egypt, and taken Boccharis, the king of that country, prisoner, caused him with great cruelty to be burnt alive, and then, feizing his kingdom, reigned there in his flead. This is the same, who in scripture is called d So. And he having thus fettled himfelf in Egypt, and after some time grown very potent there, Hoshea, king of Samaria, entered into confederacy with him, hoping by his assistance to shake off the yoke of Assyria; and, in considence hereof, he withdrew his subjection from Salmaneser, and would pay him no more tribute, nor bring any more prefents unto him, as he had formerly used every year to An. 724do. Whereon e Salmanefer, in the beginning of the Hezek. 4. fourth year of Hezekiah, marched with an army against him, and having subdued all the country round, pent him up in Samaria, and there befieged him three years; at the end of which he took the city, and thereon putting Hoshea in chains, he that him up in prison all his days, and carried the people into captivity, placing them in Halah, and in Habor, and in the other cities of the Medes, where Hezek. 7. Tiglath-Pilefer had before placed those whom he had carried into captivity out of the fame land.

In

² Kings xviii. 4.

b Vid. Sigoni hittoriam de regno Italiæ, lib. 7. Torniellum in Annalibus sub A. M. 3315. tom. 2. p. 105. Buxtorsii historiam serpentir aenei. cap. 6. &c.

⁶ Herodot, lib. 2. African, apud Cyncellum, p. 74. Eufeb. in Chronic.

d 2 Kings xvii. 4. e 2 Kings xviii.

In this captivity a, Tobit, being taken out of his city of Thifbe, in the tribe of Naphtali, was, with Anna his wife, and Tobias his son, carried into Assyria, where he became purveyor to King Salmaneser. But the rest of his brethren were carried into Media, as is above said, and planted there, as particularly were Gabael in Rages, and Raguel in Echatana, which proves Media to have been still under the king of Assyria, and that there was no king in Media in those days distinct from the king of Assyria.

There is, in the 15th and 16th chapters of Isaidh, a very terrible prophecy against Moab, bearing date in the first year of Hezekiah; wherein it was foretold, that within three years Arne and Kir-Harasheth, the two principal cities of that country, should be destroyed, and all the rest of it brought to contempt, ruin, and desolation; which must have been executed the same year that Samaria was first besieged. It seemeth most likely, that Salmaneser, to secure himself from any disturbance on that side, first invaded Moab; and, having destroyed these two cities, brought all the rest of that country under his subjection, and placed garrisons therein, sufficient to put a stop to all incursions of the Arabs, which might that way be made upon him, before he would begin that siege; for, otherwise, he could not have been able to carry it on with success.

In the fame year that Samaria was taken, b Mardoc-Empadus began his reign at Babylon. He was the fon of Belefis, or Baladin, or Nabonaffar (for by all these names was he called), and was the same c, who in scripture is called Merodach-Baladan, the son of Baladan. But, after the death of his sather, several other princes had succeeded in Babylon before the crown came to him. For d Nabonassar dying when he had sat in the throne sourteen years, after him reigned Nadeus two years; and after him Chinzerus and Porus jointly sive years; and then after them Jugæus sive years. But of these there being nothing on record besides their names in the canon of Ptolemy, we have not hitherto taken any notice of them. After Jugæus succeeded Mardoc-Empadus, in the 27th year after the beginning of his sather's kingdom in Babylon, and reigned twelve years.

While Salmanefer was engaged in the flege of Samaria, Heze-kiah took the opportunity of recovering what had been lost from his kingdom in the reign of his father. And therefore ', making war upon the Philitines, he not only regained all the cities of Judah, which they had seized during the time that Pekah and a Tobit chap. i.

2 Rezin

b Canon Ptolemæi,

c M. xxxix. 1,

d Canon Ptolemæi.

e 2 Kings xviii. 8. Josephus Ara

tig. lib. 9, c. 13.

Rezin distressed the land, but also dispossessed them of almost all their own country, excepting Gaza and Gath.

As foon as the fiege of Samaria was over, Salmaneser sent to Hezekiah to demand the tribute, which Ahaz had agreed to pay for the kingdom of Judea, in the time of Tiglath-Pileser, his father; but a Hezekiah, trusting in the Lord his God; would not hearken unto him; neither did he pay him any tribute, or send any presents unto him; which would immediately have brought Salmaneser upon him with all his power, but that he was diverted by another war.

For b Elulæus, king of Tyre, feeing the Philistines brought low by the war which Hezekiah had lately made upon them, laid hold of the opportunity of reducing Gath again under his obedience, which had some time before revolted from him: Whereupon the Gittites, applying themselves to Salmaneser, engaged him in their cause: so that he marched with his whole army against the Tyrians. Whereon Sidon, Ace, (afterwards called Ptolemais, and now Acon), and the other maritime towns of Phonicia, which till then had been subject to the Tyrians, revolted from them, and fubmitted to Salmanefer. But the · Tyrians having, in a fea fight, with twelve ships only, beaten the Afferian and Phonician fleets both joined together, which confifted of fixty thips, this gave them fuch a reputation in naval affairs, and made their name fo terrible in this fort of war, that Salmanefer would not venture to cope with them any more at fea; but turning the war into a fiege, left an army to block up the city, and returned into Affyria. The forces which he left there much distressed the place, by stopping their agreducts, and cutting off all the conveyances of water to them. To relieve themselves in this exigency, they digged wells, from whence they drew up the water, and by the help of them held out five years; at the end of which Salmanefer dying, this delivered them for that time. But they being over puffed up with this fuccess, and growing very infolent hereon, this provoked that prophecy against them in the 23d chapter of Isaiah, which foretold the miferable overthrow, that should afterwards happen unto them; and was accordingly effected by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, as will be hereafter shewn.

In the ninth year of Hezekiah, died Sabacon, or So, king of Egypt, after he had reigned in that country, eight years; and a 2 Kings xviii. 7.

Seve-

b Annales Menandri apud Josephum Antiq. lib. 9. c.14. et contra Appionem, lib. 1.

⁶ Africanus apud Syncellum, p. 74.

Sevechus a, his fon, whom Herodotus b calleth Sethon, reigned in his flead, Salmanefer, king of Affyria, being dead, after he had reigned fourteen years, Sennacherib, chis for, fucceeded him in the kingdom, and reigned about eight years. Hezek. 14. He is the fame whom the prophet Haiah (c. xx. 1.) called Sargon. As foon as he was fettled in the throne, he renewed the demand, which his father had made upon Hezekiah for the tribute, which Ahaz had agreed to pay in the reign of Tiglath-Pilefer, his grandfather; and, d on his refu-reign of Tiglath-Pileser, his grandfather; and, d on his refusal to comply with him herein, denounced war against him, and marched with a great army into Judea to fall upon him. This was in the sourteenth year of the reign of King Hezekiah.

In this same year, 'Hezekiah, falling sick of the pestilence, had a message from God, by the prophet Isaiah, to set his house in order, and prepare for death; but, on his hearty prayer to God, he obtained another message from him, by the same prophet, which promised him life for sisten years longer, and also deliverance from the Assyrians, who were then coming against him; and, to give him thorough assurance hereof, by a miraculous sign, God did, at his request, make the sun go backward ten degrees upon the sun dial of Ahaz. And, accordingly, a lump of sign having been, by the prophet's direction, made into a plaster, and laid to the pestilential boil, he recovered within three days, and went up to the house of God, to return thanks unto him for so wonderful a deliverance.

Merodach-Baladan, king of Babylon (the same who in Ptolemy's canon is called Mardoc-Empadus) hearing of An. 713. this miraculous recovery, t fent ambassadors unto Hezek. 15. him, to congratulate him hereon; which Hezekiah was much pleafed with. Their coming on this occasion, feemeth principally to have been for two reasons. The first, to inquire about the miracle of the fun's retrogradation, (for the Chaldeans, being above all other nations then given to the fludy of aftronomy, were very curious in their inquiries after fuch matters); and the other, to enter into an alliance with him against Sennacherib, whose growing power the Babylonians had reason to fear, as well as the Jews. And to make the Babylonians put the greater value upon his alliance on this account, feems to be the reason, that Hezekiah shewed those ambushadors from them all the riches of his house, his treasures, his armoury, and all his ftores, B_3 2 Kings xx. If. xxxix.

Africanus, p. 74. b Africanus, lib. 2. c Tobit. i. 15.

^{4 2} Kings xviii. 2 Chron. xxxii. If xxxvi. 2 Kings xx. 2 Chron. xxxii. 24. If. xxxviii.

flores and strength for war. But by this he having expressed the vanity and pride of his mind, God sent him, by the prophet Isaiah, a rebuking message for it, and also a prophecy of what the Babylomans thould afterwards do unto his family, in order to the humbling of that pride, with which his heart was then elated.

Towards the end of the 14th year of Hezekiah's reign, a Sennacherib came up with a great army against the fenced cities of Judah, and took feveral of them, and laid flege to Lachish, threatening Jerusalem itself next. Whereon Hezekiah, taking advice of his princes and chief counfeliors, made all manner of preparations for its defence; repairing the walls, and making new ones, where they were wanting, and fortifying them with towers, and all other works and buildings, necessary for their defence. And he provided also darts and shields in great abundance, and all other arms and artillery, which might be any way useful for the defending of the place, and the annoying of the enemy on their coming against it. And he caused all the people to be inrolled and marshalled for the war, that were fit and able for it; placing over them captains of experience, to instruct them in all military exercises, and to conduct and lead them forth against the enemy, whenever there should be an occasion for it. And he took care also to stop up all the wells, that were without the walls of Jerusalem, for a great compass round the city, and diverted all brooks and water-courses from coming that way; thereby to diffress the enemy for want of water, should they come and fet down before that place. And farther, to strengthen himself the more, against so potent and formidable an enemy, he entered into alliance with the king of Egypt for their mutual defence. But b the prophet Isaiah condemned this alliance, as carrying with it a diffrust in God, telling the Jews, that they should confide in him alone for their deliverance, yel o would himfelf come down to fight for Mount Zion, and deliver and preferve Jerusalem from the power of the enemy, that was then rifen up against it: and that whatsoever trust they thould place in Egypt, should all come to nothing, and be of no benefit to them, but rather turn to their shame, their reproach, and their confusion; and so in the event it accordingly happened.

However, Sennacherib being informed of all these preparations, which Hezekiah hadmade for his desence, and perceiving thereby how difficult a work it would be to take so strong acity, when so well appointed, and provided for its desence, he became inclined to hearken to terms of accommodation; and therefore, on Hezekiah's sending to treat with him, it was agreed, that Hezekiah

^{* 2} Kings xx. 2 Chron. xxxii. If. xxxvi. b If. xxx. xxxi.

Hezekiah paying unto him a three hundred talents of filver, and thirty talents of gold for the prefeat, and duly rendering his tribute for the future, there should be peace. But when Sennacherib had received the money, he had little regard to this agreement, but foon after broke it, and again renewed the war as will be hereafter thown. However, for the prefent, he gave him fome respite, and marched against Egypt; and, the better to open his way into that country, b he tent lartan, one of his generals, before him to take Aihded, or Azotus: from the taking of which place, the prophet Isaiah dates the beginning of the war which Sennacherib had with the Egyptians; wherein, according as that prophet chad foretold, he much afflicted that people three years together, destroying their cities, and carrying multitudes of them into captivity. At that time Sevechus, the fon of Sabacon, or So, the Ethiopian, was king of Egypt, whom Herodotus d calls Sethon, and represents him as a prince of fo foolith a conduct, as was most likely to bring fuch a calamity upon his kingdom, whenfoever it should be assaulted by an enemy. For, affecting the office of a priest, he neglected that of a king, and causing himself to be confecrated chief pontif of Vulcan, gave himfelf wholly up to fuperstition; and, having no regard to the warlike defence of his kingdom, he fo far neglected and discouraged the military order which was there maintained for it, that he took from them their tenures, which, in the time of the former kings, his predecessors, had been allowed them for their support; which gave them fuch a just cause of offence and indignation against him, that, when he had need for their valour on this occasion, they would not fight for him; whereon he was forced to raife an army of fuch raw and unexperienced men as he could get out of the shopkeepers, tradesmen, labourers, and fuch like people; which being wholly unable to cope with fuch an army of veterans as Sennacherib brought against them, he did with great eafe over-run the country, and work what devastation in it he pleased. And at this time seems to have been brought upon No-Amon, a famous city in Egypt, that destruction which the prophet Nahum speaks of (ch. in. 10.), a An Hebrew talent, according to the feripture, Exod. xxxviii. 25—27. containing 3000 shekels, and every shekel being 3 shillings of our money, these 300 talents of silver must contain of our money one hundred thirty-tive thousand pound, and the 30 talents of gold, two hundred and sixteen thousand pound. So the whole sum here paid by Hezekiah amounted to three hundred fifty one thousand pound of our money.

b lf. xx. 1.

c H. xx. 3. 4. Josephus Antiq. lib. 10, c. 1. 2. d Herod. lib. 2.

where he tells us that her inhabitants were carried into captivity, her young children dashed in pieces in the top of her streets, and her great men divided by lot among the conquerors, and put into chains, to be led away as slaves and captives. All which, he tells us, happened, while Egypt and Ethiopia were her strength, which plainly points out unto us this time, when an Ethiopian prince reigned over Egypt. Sabacon, or So, the father of Sevechus, was an Ethiopian, who made himself king of Egypt by conquest; and therefore, during his and his son's reign, Egypt and Ethiopia were as one country, and they mutually helped each other, an instance whereof will not be wanting in this war.

No-Amon in Egypt was a the fame with Thebes, famous for its hundred gates, and vast number of inhabitants. The Greeks called it Diospolis, or the city of Jupiter, because of a famous temple built there to Jupiter; and for the same reason was it called No-Amon by the Egyptians, for Amon was the name of Jupiter among that people.

It is to be observed, that the destruction of No-Amon, mentioned in Nahum, must have been some time before that of Nineveh; for the former is historically related by him as pass, and the other only prophetically foretold as to come; and therefore Nineveh, having been destroyed in the 29th year of Josiah, as will bereaster be shewn, this destruction of No-Amon must have been long before, and in no time more likely than when Sennacherib made this war upon Egypt, and harassed it from one end to the other, for three years together. They who refer this destruction of No-Amon, spoken of by Nahum, to the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, place it after the destruction of Nineveh, and thereby make one part of the text inconsistent with the other.

But Sennacherib did not end this war with the fame fuccess as he begun it; for, b having laid fiege to Pelusium, and spent much time in it, he was at length forced to break up from thence, and retreat out of Egypt, because of Tirhakah, king An. 710.

Thezek. 18. of Ethiopia; for he being come into Egypt with a great army, to help Sevechus, his kinsman, was on a full march towards Pelusium, to relieve the place, which Sennacherib hearing of, durst not abide his coming, but raised the sleep, and returning into Judea, encamped again at c Lachish, where he renewed the war with Hezekiah, notwithstanding the agreement of peace which he had afore made with him; and, to let him know as much, he fent Tartan, Rabsaris, and Rab-b Joseph. Antiq. lib. 10. c. r.

[&]quot; Vide Bochart. Phaleg. part 1. lib. 1. c. 1.

^{° 3} Kings xvill. 17. 18. &c. 2 Chron. xxxii. 9. 10. &c. Ifaiah xxxvi.

Rabshakeh, three of his principal captains, with that proud and blasphemous message, which we have at full recited a in two places of the holy icripture. It was delivered to the king's officers, from under the walls of Jerusalem, in the hearing of all the people, and in the Hebrew tongue: for they hoped thereby to draw the people to a revolt; but they, failing of fuccess herein, returned to Sennacherib without their defign. The person appointed to deliver this message was Rabshakeh, who, by his ready fpeaking of the Hebrew tongue, feems to have been an apostate Jew, or else one of the captivity of Israel. By office he was the king's chief cup-bearer, as his name imports. On their return, they found Sennacherib decamped from Lachish, and laying siege at Libnah; where, hearing that Tirhakah, on his finding him gone from Pelufium, was marching after him, as in pursuit of one flying from him, he led forth his army against him, and gave him a great overthrow; for it was b from God, by the prophet Isaiah before, laid as a burden upon Egypt, and as a burden upon Ethiopia, thus to be punished by him, and he was no more than as God's executioner herein. But, before c he went forth to this last war, he sent again to Hezekiah, adding a most blasphemous letter to his former message, defying therein, both him, and also the Lord his God, in a most impious manner; which justly provoked the wrath of God against him, to that degree, as brought a most dismal destruction upon him, to the cutting off of almost all his army: for when, fwelling with his fresh victory over the Ethiopians, he was on his full march towards Jerufalem, with thorough purpose utterly to destroy that place, and all in it, an angel of the Lord went forth, and, in one night, fmote in the camp of the Affyrians an hundred fourfcore and five thousand men; fo that, when he arose in the morning, he found almost all his army dead corpses; with which being terrified, he fled out of Judea in great confusion, and made all the haste he could back again to Nineveh, where he dwelt all the remainder of his life, in dishonour, shame, and regret. This happened in the 18th year of King Hezekiah, and four year. after Sennacherib first came into those parts. After this, Hezekiah reigned the rest of his time in great peace and prosperity, being feared and honoured by all the nations round him, by reafon of the favour which they faw he had with the Lord his God, in the great and wonderful deliverance which he had voucnfafed unto him; fo that none of them, after this, would any more lift up their hand against him. The ² Kings xviii. 19: 20. &c. If. xxxvi. 4. 5. &c.

If. xviii. and xx.

f If. xxxvii. 2 Kings xix. 2 Chron. xxxii.

The Babylouith Talmud hath it, that this destruction upon the army of the Assyrians was executed by lightning; and some of the Targums are quoted for saying the same thing. But it seemeth most likely, that it was effected by bringing on them the hot wind which a is frequent in those parts, and often, when it lights among a multitude, destroys great numbers of them in a moment, as it frequently happens in those vast caravans of the Mahometans who go their annual pilgrimages to Mecca. And the words of b Isaiah, which threatened Sennacherib with a blast, that God would send upon him, seem to denote this thing.

Herodotus c gives us, from the relation of the Egyptian priefts, some kind of a difguised account of this deliverance from the Assyrians in a fabulous application of it to the city of Pelufium, instead of Jerusalem, and to Sethon, the Egyptian king, instead of Hezekiah; by whose piety he saith it was obtained, that, while the king of Affyria laid fiege to Pelufium, a great number of rats were miraculously fent into his army, which in one night did eat all their shield-straps, quivers, and bow-Arings; fo that, on their rifing the next morning, finding themdelves without arms for the carrying on of the war, they were forced to raise the siege and be gone. And it is particularly to be remarked, that Herodotus calls the king of Asiyria, to whom he faith this happened, by the fame name of Sennacherib, as the fcriptures do, and the time in both doth also well agree; which plainly shews, that it is the same fact that is referred to by Herodotus, although much disguised in the relation; which may eafily be accounted for, when we confider, that it comes to us through the hands of fuch as had the greatest aversion both to the nation and the religion of the Jews, and therefore would relate nothing in fuch manner as might give any repu-*ation to either.

After this terrible blow, and the lofs of fo great an army, Sennacherib was fo weakened, that he had no way of again recovering himfelf; which making him to fall into contempt among his subjects, several of his provinces revolted from him, and particularly Media, which was the largest and the most considerable of all his empire. For the Medes, when they heard in how low a condition he was returned to Nineveh, immediately shook off his yoke, and set dup for themselves.

Thevenot's Travels, part 2. book 1.c. 20. & p. 2. b. 2. c. 16. & p. 1. b. 2. c. 20. This wind is by the prophet Jeremiah, c. li. 1. called "A destroying wind," where the Arabick verson renders it, "An hot pestilential wind."

b If. xxxvii. 7. 2 Kings xix 7.

⁶ Lib. 2.

d Herodotus, lib. 1.

themselves, in a fort of democratical government; but soon growing sick of the consustions which this caused among them, they were forced to have recourse to monarchy for the remedy, and the next year after chose Deioces for their king, whom they had formerly made great use of as a common arbitrator of their differences, and, for the great proof which he had given of his justice and abilities on such occasions, they advanced him to this dignity. He began his reign in the 19th year of King Hezekiah; and having repaired, beautissed, and enlarged, the city of Ecbatana, he made it the royal scat of his kingdom, and reigned there with great wisdom, honour, and prosperity, 53 years; during which time, it growing to be a great city, he is for this reason reckoned by the Greeks to have been the founder of it.

The fame year a Arkianus began his reign at Babylon, after the decease of Mardoch-Empadus, or Merodach-Baladan, who ended his life with the former year, after having reigned over the Babylonians twelve years.

Sennacherib, after his return to Nineveh, being inflamed with rage for his great lofs and disappointment, as if he would revenge himfelf upon his subjects for it, grew thenceforth b very cruel and tyrannical in the management of his government, especially towards the Jews and Ifraelites, abundance of whom he caused every day to be slain and cast into the ftreets: by which favage humour having made himfelf fo intolerable, that he could be no longer borne by his own family, his two eldest sons c, Adramelech and Sharezar, conspired against him, and, falling upon him while he was worshipping in the house of Nifroch, his god, they there slew him with the fword; and thereon having made their escape into the land of Armenia, Efarhaddon, his third fon, reigned in his flead. Some commentators d will have it, that he had vowed to facrifice these his two sons to appease his gods, and make them the more favourable to him for the restoration of his affairs, and that it was to prevent this that they thus facrificed him. But for this there is no other foundation, but that scarce any thing elfe can be thought of which can afford any excuse for fo wicked and barbarous a parricide.

Efarhaddon began his reign over Affyria about the 22d year of King Hezekiah, which was the last of the reign of Sevechus, or Sethon, in the kingdom of Egypt; who dying, after he had reigned fourteen years,

^a Can. Ptol.

b Tobit i. 18.

c 2 Kings xix. 37. 2 Chron. xxxii. 21. If. xxxvii. 38.

d Bishop Patrick on 2 Kings xix. 37. Saliar us tub anno ante Christum 729.

years a, was succeeded by Tirhakah, the same who came with the Ethiopian army to his help. He was the third and last of that race that reigned in Egypt.

In the 23d year of Hezekiah, Arkianus dying without iffue, there followed an b interregnum of two years, in the kingdom of Babylon, before they could agree upon a fucceffor. At length b Belibus, being advanced to the throne, fat in it three years. After him fucceeded b Apronadius, and reigned fix years.

The fame year that Apronadius began his reign at Babylon, Hezekiah ended his at Jerusalem: for che died
there, after he had reigned twenty and nine years;
and all Judah and Jerusalem did him honour at his death; for they buried him, with great solemnity, in the chiefest and highest place of the sepulchres of the sons of David, expressing thereby, that they looked on him as the worthiest and best of all that had reigned over them of that family, since him that was the first sounder of it.

The burial-place, called the fepulchres of the kings of the house of David (which hath been afore spoken of) was a very fumptuous and flately thing d. It lies now without the walls of Jerusalem, but, as is supposed, was formerly c within them, before that city was destroyed by the Romans. It confists of a large court of about 120 feet iquare, with a gallery, or cloyfter, on the left hand, which court and gallery, with the pillars that supported it, were cut out of the folid marble rock. At the end of the gallery there is a narrow passage of hole, through which there is an entrance into a large room or hall, of about twenty-four feet square, within which there are feveral leffer rooms one within another, with stone doors opening into them; all which rooms, with the great room, were all likewise cut out of the folid marble rock. In the aldes of those lefler rooms are several niches, in which the corpfes of the deceased kings were deposited in stone costins. In the innermost, or chiefest of these rooms, was the body of Hezekiah

^a Africanus apud Syncellum, p. 74.

b Ptol. Can.

² Kings xx. 21. 2 Chron. xxxii. 33.

d Thevenot's Travels, part 1. book 2. c. 40. Maundrel's Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 76.

⁶ Maimonides in his tract, Beth Habbechirah, c. 7. Lith, in Jerulalem, they do not allow a fepulchie, except the fepulchies of the house of David, and the fepulchie of Huldah the prophetes, which were there from the days of the former prophets. This proves these sepulchies to have been within the world of Jerusalem, and that the world of scripture which place them in the city of David are shriftly to be understood.

Hezekiah laid in a nich, perchance cut of purpose at that time for it, in the upper end of that room, to do him the greater honour; and all this remains entire even to this day. It seems to have been the work of King Solomon, for it could not have been made without vast expence; and it is the only true remainder of old Jerusalem which is now to be seen in that place.

Hezekiah, during his reign, much improved the city of Jerusalem, not only a by new fortifying of it, erecting magazines therein, and filling them with all manner of armoury, which were of use in those days, but also by building b a new aqueduct, which was of great convenience to the inhabitants for the supplying of them with water: and, for the better promoting of religion, he maintained skilful scribes to collate together and write out copies of the holy scripture; and it is particularly mentioned, that the Proverbs of Solomon were thus collected together and wrote out by those men.

And in his time the d Simeonites, being straitened in their habitations, much enlarged their borders toward the fouthfor falling on the Amalekites, who dwelt in part of Mount Seir, and in the rich valley adjoining, they smote them, and utterly destroyed them, and dwelt in their rooms.

But it was the misfortune of this good king Hezeziah to be fucceeded by a fon who was the wickedest and worst of the whole race: for after him reigned Manaffeh, who being a minor only 12 years old, at his coming to the crown, had the misfortune to fall into the hands of fuch of the nobility for his guardians and chief ministers, who, being ill affected to his father's reformation, took care to breed him up in the greatest aversion to it that they were able, corrupting his youth with the worst of principles, both as to religion and government; fo that, when he grew up, he proved the most impious towards God, and most tyrannical and wicked towards his subjects, of any that had ever reigned, either in Jerufalem or Samaria, over the tribes of Ifrael; for he not only restored all the idolatry of Ahaz, but went much beyond him in every abomination, whereby the true worship of God might be suppressed, and his most holy name dishonoured in the land; for whereas Ahaz did only that up the house of God, he converted it into a house of all manner of idolatrous profanation, setting up an image in the fanctuary, and erecting altars for Baalim, and a 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. Ecclesiasticus xlviii, 17.

b 2 Kings xx. 20. 2 Chron. xxxii. 30. Ecclefiasticus xlviii. 12.

c Prov. xxv. 1.

d 1 Chron. iv. 39.---43.

^o 2 Kings xxi. 2 Chron. xxxiii.

all the hoft of heaven, in both its courts; and he also practifed witchcrafts, and inchantments, and dealt with familiar spirits, and made his children pass through the fire to Molech, and filled Judah and Jerusalem with his high places, idols, groves, and altars erected to false gods, and brought in all manner of other idolatrous profanations, whereby the true religion might be most corrupted, and all manner of impiety be most promoted, in the kingdom: and, to all these ways of abomination, he made Judah and Jerusalem to conform, raising a terrible perfecution against all that would not comply with him herein, whereby he filled the whole land with innocent blood, of which he did shed very much in the carrying on of these and his other wicked purposes. And when God fent his prophets to him, to tell him of these his iniquities, and to exhort him to depart from them, he treated them with contempt and outrage, and feveral a of them he put to death; and, particularly, it is faid, that Isaiah the prophet, on this account, suffered martyrdom under him, by being cruelly fawn afunder. This was b an old tradition among the Jews; and the holy apostle, St Paul, in his epistle to the Hebrews (c. xi. 37.) having among the torments undergone by the prophets and martyrs of foregoing times, reckoned that of being fawn afunder, he c is generally thought in that place to have had respect hereto. By which horrid iniquities and abominations, God was so justly incensed against the land, that he declared hereon, d that he would firetch out over Terusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab, and wipe Jerusalem clean of all its inhabitants, as a man wipoth a dish, and turneth it when empty upside down. Which, accordingly, was executed upon it, in the destruction of that city, and the defolation which was brought upon all Judah at the fame time. And among all the iniquities that drew down these heavy judgements upon that city and land, the fins of Manasseh are always reckoned as e the most provoking cause; by which an estimate may be best made of the greatness of them.

In the fifth year of Manasseh died f Apronadius, king of Babylon, and was succeeded by f Regibilus, who reigned anals. S. Manass. After him, Mesessimordacus had the kingdom, and held it four years.

Ιπ

a Josephus Antiq. lib. 10. c. 4.

b Talmud. Hierofol. in Sanhedrin, fol. 28. col. 3. Talm. Babylor. in Jevammoth, fol. 49. col. 2. ct in Sanhedrin, fol. 103. col. 2. Shalfhelleth Hakkabbalah, fol. 19. col. 1. Yaikut Lib. Regum, fol. 38. col. 4.

^c Vid. Juftin. Martyr. in Dialogo cum Tryphone. Hieronymum in Efaiam, c. 20. & 57. Epiphanium, et alios.

d 2 Kings xxi. 13.

c 2 Kings xxiii. 26. & xxiv. 3. Jer. xv. 4.

f Canon Ptolemæi.

In the 11th year of Manasseh a died Tirhakah, king of Egypt, after he had reigned there eighteen years, who was the last of the Ethiopian kings that reigned in that country. The Egyptians, after his death, not being able to agree about the succession, continued for b two years together in a state of anarchy and great confusion till cat length, twelve of the principal nobility conspiring together, seized the kingdom, and, dividing it among them selves into twelve parts, governed it by joint consederacy sisteen years.

The same year that this happened in Egypt, by the death of Tirhakah, the like happened in Babylon, by the death of Mefessimordacus. For, he leaving no son behind him to inherit the kingdom, d an interregnum of anarchy and confusion followed there, for eight years together; of which Efarhaddon, king of Affyria, taking the advantage, feized Babyking of Affyria, taking the advantage, reized Daby-An. 680. Ion; and adding it to his former empire, thenceforth Manaf. 19. reigned over both for thirteen years. He is in the canon of Ptolemy, called Affar-Adinus. And in the fcriptures he is spoken of as king of f Babylon and Assyria jointly together. In Ezra he is called & Asnappar, and hath there the honourable epithets of the great and noble added to his name by the author of that book; which argues him to have been a prince of great excellency and worth in his time, and far exceeding all others, that had reigned before him in either of the kingdoms.

In the 22d year of Manasseh, Esarhaddon, after he had now entered on the fourth year of his reign in Babylon, and fully settled his authority there, began to set his thoughts on the recovery of what had been lost to the empire of the Assyrians, in Syria and Palessine, on the destruction of his father's army in Judea, and on that doleful retreat, which thereon he was forced to make from thence; and, being encouraged to this undertaking by the great augmentation of strength which he had acquired, by adding Babylon and

Chaldea

Ezra iv. 10.

Africanus apud Syncellum, p. 74.

b Diodorus Siculus, lib. 1.

c Herodotus, lib. 2. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 7.

d Canon Ptolemæi.
Canon Ptolemæi.

f He is faid, as king of Affyria, to have brought a colony out of Babylon into Samaria, 2 Kings xvii.24. Ezra iv. 9. 10. which he could not have done, if he had not been king of Babylon, as well as of Affyria, at that time. And in 2 Chron. xxiii. 11. he is faid, as king of Affyria, to have taken Manasseh prisoner, and to have carried him to Babylon, which argues him, at that time, to have been king of Babylon also.

Chaldea to his former kingdom of Affyria, he prepared a great army, and marched into those parts, and again added them to the Affvrian empire. And then was accomplished the prophecy which was spoken by Isaiah, in the first year of Ahaz, against Samaria, a that, within threescore and five years, Ephraim should be absolutely broken, so as from thenceforth to be no more a people. For this year, being exactly fixty-five years from the first of Ahaz, Esarhaddon, after he had settled all affairs in Syria, marched into the land of Ifrael, and there taking captive all those who were the remains of the former captivity (excepting only fome few, who escaped his hands, and continued still in the land), carried them away into Babylon and Affyria; and then, to prevent the land from becoming defolate, he brought others from b Babylon, and from Cutha, and from Avah, and Hamath, and Sephervaim, to dwell in the cities of Samaria in their stead. And so the ten tribes of Israel, which had feparated from the house of David, were brought to a full and utter destruction, and never after recovered themselves again. For those who were thus carried away, as well in this as in the former captivities (excepting only fome few, who, joining themselves to the Jews in the land of their captivity, returned with them), foon going into the usages and idolatry of the nations among whom they were planted, to which they were too much addicted while in their own land, after a while, became wholly absorbed and swallowed up in them; and thenceforth, utterly losing their name, their language, and their memorial, were never after any more spoken of. And whereas there is a feet of Samaritans still remaining in Samaria, Sichem, and other towns thereabout, even to this day, who still have the law of Moses in a character peculiar to themselves, and in a dialect very little, if any thing at all, different from that of the Jews; yet these are not of the descendants of the Israelites, but of those nations which Eserhaddon brought to dwell in that country in their flead, after the others had been carried thence into captivity; and, for this reason, the Jews call them by no other name than that of Cuthites (the name of one of those nations whom Esarhaddon had planted there), and have that utter hatred and aversion to them, that, reckoning them among the worst of heretics, they express on all occasions a greater detestation of them than they do even of the Christians themselves.

Estarhaddon, after he had thus possessed himself of the land of Israel, sent some of his princes, with part of his army, into sudea, to reduce that country also under his subjection; who h 2 Kings xvii. 24. Ezra iv. 2. 10.

¹ If. vii. 8.

having vanquished Manasseh in a battle, and taken him, hid in a thicket of thorns, brought him prisoner to Esarhaddon, who bound him in fetters, and carried him to Babylon; where, his chains and his prison having brought him to himself, and a due fense of his great fin, wherewith he had finned against the Lord his God, he returned unto him with repentance and prayer, and in his affliction, greatly humbled himfelf before him: whereon, God being intreated of bythim, he mollified the heart of the king of Babylon towards him, so that, on a treaty, he was again reflored to his liberty, and returned to Jerusalem; and then, knowing the Lord to be God, he abolished all those idolatrous profanations, both out of the temple, and out of all other parts of the land, which he had in his wickedness introduced into them, and again restored in all things the reformation of King Hezekiah, his father, and walked according thereto all the remainder of his life, worthipping the Lord his God only, and none other. And all Judah conformed to him herein; fo that he continued in prosperity after this to the end of his reign, which was the longest of any of the kings that had sat on the throne of David, either before or after him; for he reigned full fifty-five years, and, these being all reckoned to his reign without any chasm, it is argued from hence, that his captivity at Babylon could not have been long; but that he was, within a very fliort time after, again released from it.

And to this time may be referred the completion of the prophecy of Isaiah concerning b the removal of Shebna, the chief minister of state, and the advancement of Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, in his place. Both of them had been ministers of state under King Hezekiah, Shebna having been his scribe or secretary, and Eliakim the mafter of his household. And their history, as far as may be collected from the words of the prophet, appears to be thus. Shebna, being a very wicked man, was a fit person to ferve the lusts and evil inclinations of Manageh in the first part of his reign, and therefore was made his fall minister of state; and Eliakim, who was of a quite contrary character, was quite laid afide. But on the revolution that happened on the coming of the army of the Aflyrians, Shebna c was taken prisoner with his mafter, and carried to Babylon, and there detained in captivity d to his death. And therefore Manaffeh, on his repentance, and return to Jerusalem, having resolved on other meafures, called for Eliakim, and put the management of all his affairs into his hands; who, being a person of great wisdom, justice,

^a 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. Josephus Antiq. lib. 10. c. 4.

uə

[•] If. xxii. 17.

b II. xxii. 15.-25.

d If. XXII. 18.

hid

and piety, foon re-established them upon the same foot as they had been in the days of Hezekiah, and fo preserved them in peace and prosperity all his time, to the great honour of the king, and the good of all his people; and therefore he hath the character given him, of being a a father to the inhabitants of Terusalem, and to all the house of Judah, and that, b having the key and government o. the house of David upon his shoulders, he was the great support of it all his days. This Eliakim is supposed to have been of the pontifical family, and to have himfelf, in the time of Manaffeh, borne the office of high priest, and to have been the fame who is mentioned by the name of Jeakim, or Eliakim, in the history of Judith, as high priest at that time: for Joakim and Eliakim are both the same name, being both of the same signification in the Hebrew tongue, and therefore the faid high priest in Judith is, in the Syriac verfion, and also in Jerome's Latin version of that book, called promiscuously by both these names But of this more will be faid hereafter in its proper place.

The nations which Esarbaddon had brought to dwell in the cities of Samaria, instead of the Israelites, who had been carried thence, being, on their fettling in that Manaf. 23, country c, much infested with lions; and the king of Babylon being told, that it was because they worshipped not the God of the country, he ordered, that one of the priefts, which had been carried thence, should be fent back to teach these new inhabitants how to worship the God of Israel. But they only took him hereon into the number of their former deities, and worshipped him jointly with the gods of the nations from whence they came; and in this corruption of joining the worship of their false gods with that of the true, they continued, till the building of the Samaritan temple on Mount Gerizzim by Sanballat; but, on that occasion, abundance of lews falling off to them, they reduced them from this idolatry, to the worship of the true God only, as shall be hereafter related; and they have continued in the same worship ever fince, even to this day.

In the eight and twentieth year of the reign of Manasseh, the twelve confederated fovereigns of Egypt, after they Manaf. 28. had jointly reigned there fifteen years, falling d out among themselves, expelled Plainmitichus, one of their number, out of his share, which he had hitherto had with them in the government of the kingdom, and drove him into banishment; whereon, flying into the fens near the fea, he lay

⁴ Ifaish xxii. 21.

c 2 Kings xvii. 9 Ifaiah xxii. 27. d Herodot. lib. 2. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 1.

hid there, till, having gotten together out of the Arabian freebooters, and the pirates of Caria and Ionia, such a number of foldiers, as with the Egyptians of his party, made a confiderable army, he marched with it against the other cleven, and, having overthrown them in battle; flew feveral of them, and drove the rest out of the land; and thereon, seizing the whole kingdom to himfelf, reigned over it in great prosperity fifty and four years.

As foon as he was well fettled in the kingdom, he a entered into a war with the king of Assyria, about the boundaries of their two empires, which lasted many Manas. 29. years: for, after the Affyrians had conquered Syria, Palestine only separating their respective territories, it became a conftant bone of contention between them, as it was between the Ptolemys and the Seleucidæ afterwards, both parties striving which of the two should have the mastery of this province; and, according as they prevailed, fometimes the one, and fometimes the other possessed themselves of it. From the time of Hezekiah, it appears to have been in the hands of the Egyptians till the captivity of Manasseh. But, when Esarhaddon had conquered Judea, and carried the king prisoner to Babylon (as hath been above mentioned), it is plain, that, from thenceforth the king of Affyria became mafter of all, even to the very entry of Egypt; and the Egyptians, being at that time divided under feveral princes, and in civil wars among themselves, were in no capacity to put a stop to this progress. But when Psammitichus had gained the whole monarchy to himfelf, and again fettled the affairs of that kingdom upon its former foundation (which happened about feven years after the captivity of Manaffeh), he thought it time to look to the frontiers of his kingdom, and fecure them as well as he could against the power of this growing neighbour, and therefore marched with an army into Palestine for this purpose; but, in the entry thereof, he found Ashdod, one of the first towns of that country, so strong a barrier against him, that it b cost him a blockade of nine and twenty years, before he could make himfelf mafter of it.

This place had formerly been cone of the five capital cities of the country of the Philistines. After this, the Egyptians got possession of it, and, by well fortifying of it, made it so strong a barrier of their empire on that fide, that Sennacherib could not enter Egypt, till a he had, by Tartan, one of his generals. made himself master of it; and, when he had gotten it into his possession, finding the importance of the place, he added so much

c I Samuel vi. 17.

^a Herodotus, lib. 2. Herodotus, lib. 2.

d Ifaiah xx. 1.

to its strength, that, not withstanding his unfortunate retreat out of Egypt, and the terrible loss of his army in Judea, immediately after, the Assyrians still kept it even to this time; and it was not without that long and tedious siege, which I have mentioned, that the Egyptians at last became again masters of it. And, when they had gotten it, they found it in such a manner wasted and reduced by so long a war, that it did them but little service afterwards; it being then no more than the carcase of that city, which it had formerly been. And therefore the prophet Jeremiah, speaking of it, calls it a "the remnant of Ashdod," intimating thereby, that it was then only the poor remains of what it had been in times foregoing.

But, notwithstanding this long siege, the whole war did not rest there. While part of the army lay at the blockade, the rest carried on the war against the other parts of Palestine; and so it continued many years, which obliged Manasseh b to fortify Jerusalem anew, and to put strong garrisons into all his frontier towns against them; for, since his release from the captivity of the Affyrians, and the restoration of his kingdom again to him, he was obliged to become their homager, and engage on their fide in this war against the Egyptians, although they had been his former allies. And the better to enable him to support himself herein, and also the more firmly to fix him in his fidelity to them, they feem at this time to have put under his command all the other parts of the land of Canaan, that is, all that had been formerly possessed by the kings of Samaria, as well as what belonged to him as king of Judah; for it is certain, that Jofiah, his grandfon, had all this (as will be hereafter fhewn), that is, not only the two tribes which made up the kingdom of Judah, but also all that had formerly been possessed by the other ten under the kings of Hrael. And the most probable account that can be given of his coming by all this, is, that it was all given to Manasseh on this occasion, to hold in homage of the kings of Affyria, and that, after his death, it was continued to his fon and grandson on the same conditions; in the performance of which that good and just prince, King Josiah, afterwards loft his life, as will be shewn in its proper place.

In the 31st year of Manasseh died Esarhaddon, after he had reigned, with great felicity, thirty-nine years over the Assylvanas, and thirteen over the Babylonians; and c Saosduchinus, his son, reigned in his stead. He is the same who in the book of Judith is called d Nabuchodonosor. In the beginning of the 12th year of his reign, which a Jeremiah xxv. 20.

² Chron. xxxiii. 14.

^c Canon. Ptol.

d Judith i. z.

was the 43d of Manasseh, a he fought a great battle in the plains of Ragau, with Deioces, king of Media (who in the book of Judith is called Arphaxad), and, having overthrown him, and put him to flight, pursued after him to the adjacent mountains, where he made his retreat, and there, having overtaken him, he cut him off, and all his army; and thereon following his blow, and making the best of the advantage he had gotten, he made himself master of many of the cities of Media, and among them took c Echatana itself, the royal seat of the Median empire; and, after having miserably defaced it, returned in great triumph to Nineveh, and there took his pleasure in banquetting and feasting, both he and his army, for an hundred and twenty days.

After this time of feasting was over, d he called his officers, nobles, and chief counfellors together, to take an account of what tributary countries and provinces had not gone with him to the war, for he had summoned them all to attend him herein; and, finding that none of the western countries had paid any regard to his commands in this matter, he made a decree, that Holosernes, the chief captain of his army, should go forth, to execute the wrath of his lord upon them for it. And, accordingly, the next year after, he marched westward with an army of an hundred and twenty thousand foot, and twelve thousand horse, and there wasted and destroyed a great many of those nations; till at length coming into Judea, and laying siege to Bethulia, he was there deftroyed, and all his army cut in pieces, in the manner

as is in the book of Judith at full related.

That Arphaxad in the faid book of Judith was Deioces, and Nabuchodonofor, Saofduchinus, appears from hence, that Arphaxad is faid to be that king of Media, who was the founder of Echatana, which all other writers agree to have been Deioces; and the beginning of the 12th year of Saofduchinus exactly agreeth with the last year of Deioces, when this battle of Ragau is faid to have been fought. And there are several particulars in that history, which make it utterly inconfishen with any other times; for it was while Nineveh was the metropolis of the Assyrian empire, it was while the Persians, Syrians, Phænicians, Cilicians, and Egyptians, were subject to them; it was while the Median empire was in being, and not long after the building of Echatana; none of which core described.

² Judith i. 5.

b Judith i. r. Judith i. 14.

d Judith ii,

e Tudith i. 1. 2.

f Judith i. 1.

g Jadith i. 7-10-

h Judith i, 1,2.

be after the captivity of Judah, where some would place this history. For, before that time, Nineveh had been long deftroyed, and both the Assyrian and Median empires had been wholly extinguished, and the Persians, instead of being subject to the Assyrians, had made themselves lords over them, and over all the other nations of the East, from the Hellespont to the river Indus; for so far they had extended and established their empire, before the Jews were returned from the Babylonish captivity, and settled again in their own country. And therefore we must go much higher than the times after that captivity, to find a proper scene for the matters in that book related; and it can be no where laid more agreeably both with scripture and prophane history, than in the time where I have placed it.

This book of Judith was originally written a in the Chaldee language, by fome Jew of Babylon (which is not now extant), and from thence, at the defire of Paula and Euftochium, was, by St Jerome, translated into the Latin tongue; which is the translation that is now extant in the vulgar Latin edition of the Bible, of which he himself saith, in the preface before it, that he did not translate it word for word, but only rendered it according to the fenfe of the author; and that, cutting off all the corruptions of various readings, which he found in different copies, he did put only that into the trauslation, which he judged to be the true and entire fense of the original. But, besides this translation of St Jerome, there are two others, one in Greek, and the other in Syriac. That which is in Greek is attributed to Theodotion, who flourished in the time of Commodus, who was made Roman emperor in the year of Christ 180. But it must be much ancienter; for Clemens Romanus, in his epistle to the Corinthians (which was wrote near 120 years before), brings a quotation out of it. The Syriac translation was made from the Greek, and so was also the English, which we at present have among the apocryphal writings in our Bible. And it is to be observed, that all these three versions last mentioned, have feveral particulars, which are not in Jerome's; and fome of thefe feem to be those various readings, which he professeth to have cut off as corruptions of the text: and particularly that which is added in the 13th verse of the first chapter, appears to be of this fort; for there the battle of Ragau is placed in the 17th year of Nabuchodonofor, which is directly contradictory to what is in the former part of the same chapter, for there it is positively said, that it was in the 12th year of his reign And, agreeable hereto, Jerome's version placeth the expedition of Holofernes lofernes (that was the next year after) in the 13th year of Nabuchodonofer, which is the truth of the matter; whereas the other, following the blunder of the former contradiction, makes another, by placing it in the 18th year of his reign, and fo renders that part of the history wholly inconfishent with itself. And therefore certainly, in this particular, Jerome's version is to be preferred, which gives good reason to think, that it ought to be so in all the rest, wherever there is any difference between them.

^a Hieronymi Præfatio in Librum Judith.

But still, whether the book be a true or a feigned history, is what learned men are not agreed in. The Romanists will have it all to be true; for they have received it into the canon of divine writ. But, on the other hand, it is the opinion of a Grotius, that it is wholly a parabolical fiction, written in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, when he came into Judea to raife a persecution against the Jewish church; and that the design of it was, to confirm the Jews under that perfecution in their hopes that God would fend them a deliverance: 'That therein, by Judith is meant Judea; by Bethulia, the temple or house of God; and by the fword, which went out from thence, the prayers of the faints; that Nabuchodonofor doth there 6 denote the devil; and the kingdom of Affvria, the devil's ' kingdom, pride: that by Holofernes is there meant the inftrument or agent of the devil in that perfecution; Antio-6 chus Epiphanes, who made himself master of Judea, that fair widow, fo called, because destitute of relief: that Elia-6 kim fignifies God, who would arise in her defence, and at · length cut off that instrument of the devil who would have ' corrupted her.' This particular explication of the parable (as he will have it to be) is, I confers, the peculiar fancy of this great man: But otherwise there are abundance of other learned writers among the Protestants, who agree with him in the general, that this book is rather a parabolical than a real history, made for the instructing and comforting of the people of the Jews under that figure, and not to give them a narrative of any thing really done; and their reason for it is, that they think it utterly inconfishent with all times, where it hath been endeavoured to be placed, either before or after the captivity of the lews. My putting it in the time of Manafleh takes off all the objections which are brought to prove its inconfishency with the times after the captivity, which, I confess. are unanfwerable.

But where it here stands, the objections from the other part still remain; and they are these following: 1/t, That Joakim or a In Præfatione ad Annotationes in Librum Judith.

Eliakiam (for they are acknowledged to be both a the fame name) is faid in the history of Judith to have been then high priest; but there is none of that name to be found, either in the scriptures or in Josephus, that was high priest before the captivity. 2dly, Actior the Amonite, in his speech to Holofernes (ch. v. ver. 18), there speaks of the temple as having been lately cast to the ground, which was not done till the last year of the reign of Zedekiah; and therefore this cannot be confiltent with any time before it; and the 3d verse of chapter iv. plainly puts it after the captivity; for there the text is, that the people of the Tews were newly returned from their captivity, when Holofernes invaded Judea. 3dly, The chief management of the public affairs of the state are in that book placed wholly in the high priest, without any mention made of the king throughout the whole of it, or implying in the least, that there was then any such government in the land; which renders it wholly inconfittent with any other times thanthose in which there was no king in Judah. 4thly, That, in the conclusion of the book, Judith is said to have lived an hundred and five years; and that none made the children of Ifrael any more afraid in all her days, nor a long time after her death. But supposing her to have been 45 years old when she went out to Holofernes (and in an older age she cannot well be supposed to have beauty enough to charm such a man), to make her an hundred and five years old, there must be 60 years more added to her life, which will carry down her death to the 4th year of Zedekiah, when the flate of the Jews had for feveral years been exceedingly diffurbed by the Babylonians, and was, within a little while after, totally subverted by them; which makes both her life and her death absolutely inconfistent with the times in which they are above placed.

To the first of these objections it may be answered, is, That though there be no such person as Joakim, or Eliakim, named in scripture to have been high priest before the captivity, yet this is no argument but that there might have been such an one; for the scripture no where professeth to give us an exact catalogue of all such as had been high priests till the captivity. That which looks most like it is what we have in the 6th chapter of the first book of Chronicles. But that is only a direct lineal descent of the pontifical samily from Aaron to Jozadack, the son of Seraiah, who was high priest at the captivity, and not a

^{*} For they are both of the fame fignification, El being the name of God in one, as Jehovah is the other, and the latter part of the name is the fame in both; and therefore, as Jehoiakim, or Joakim, king of Judah, is called also Eliakim, so this high prieft is, in the version of Jerome, called promiseuously by both names.

catalogue of fuch as had borne the pontifical office; for feveral are in that pedigree who never were high priefts, and feveral are left out that were. The high priests of the family of Eli are inflances of the latter; for they are left out of that pedigree. though they were high priefts: and those of the true race, who were excluded by them, are inflances of the former; for they are in it, though they never were high priefts. And it is very likely, that, from the time of Solomon to the captivity, many more fuch inflances might have happened to hinder that pedigree from being an exact catalogue of the high priests: for, on the minority, or fome other unqualifying defect of the right heir, the next collateral must have been admitted to the office, whose name could not come into the pedigree; and, on the failing of an elder branch (as might have happened), the heir of the next collateral branch must have come into the office; and then the ancestors of the collateral successor must be in the pedigree, though they never had been in the office, and those of the elder branch, though they had been in the office, could not be in the pedigree, because it had failed. For it is only the pedigree of Jozadack, the fon of Seraiah, who was high prieft at the captivity, which is in a direct line from Aaron, that is given us in the 6th chapter of the first book of Chronicles: and it being the usage of the Jews, in their pedigrees, to pass from a remote ancestor to a remote descendant, by leaving out those who are between, of which abundance of instances might be given in feripture, it is possible this also might have happened in this case. And thus much is certain, that four high priests named in scripture are not in that pedigree, i. e. Jehoidah, and Zechariah his fon, who were high priests in the reign of Joash; Azariah, who was high priest in the reign of Uzziah; and Urijah, who was high priest in the reign of Ahaz, kings of Judah. There are indeed two Azariahs named in that pedigree, besides the Azariah who was the father of Seraiah; but neither of these two could be the Azariah that was high priest in the time of Uzziah: for a Amariah, the fon of the last of the said two Azariabs in that pedigree, was high priest in the time of Jehosaphat, five generations before. As to the pedigrees of the high priests in Ezra and Nehemiah, they are but imperfect parts of that which we have in the 6th chapter of the Ist book of Chronicles. As for the catalogue of Josephus, it is fo corrupted, that scarce five of the names in it agree with any thing that we have in fcripture. And therefore, putting all this together, Joakim or Eliakim might have been high priest in the time of Manasleh, though there be no mention of him as fuch, by either of his names, either in the hely feriptures or İİY in the history of Josephus. But, 2dly, That this Joakim or Eliakim (for both, as hath been afore observed, is the same name) is not named in scripture, is not certainly true: for there are some who will have Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, that is afore spoken of, to have been the person, and understand what is faid in If. xxii. 21. of the robe and the girdle, which he was to put on, as meant of the pontifical robe and girdle; and therefore infer from hence, that he was high priest: and * St Jerome and St Cyril, among the ancients, both were of this opinion. And it must be said, that what is there prophesied of him by Isaiah, that God would commit the government of the state to his hands, in the room of Shebnah, who was chief minister before him; and that he should be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah; and that the key of the house of David should be laid upon his shoulder, to open and to shut without controul, as he should think fit, doth very well agree with that part which Joakim is faid to have acted in the book of Judith. But that he was the same person is what I durst not from that, which is brought to prove it, lay much stress upon; neither is there any need of it for the satisfying of this objection, what I have else faid being sufficient for it.

adly, As to the objection from ch. iv. ver. 3. of Judith, and from the speech of Achior (ch. v. ver. 18.), the words on which they are founded are not in Jerome's version; and therefore it is most likely they were put into the Greek version (from whence the English is taken) from some of those corrupted copies of the original which Jerome complains of: for in his verfion) which he made from the best corrected copies of the origiral Chaldee), ver. 3. of chapter iv. is wholly left out, as are also those words of ch. v. ver 18. which speak of the temple's having been cast to the ground. And although there be words still remaining in Jerome's version, as well as in our English, which speak of the captivity and dispersion of the Jews, and their late restoration again to their own land; yet they are none other than what may be better understood of the Asfyrian captivity, in the time of Manasleh, than of the Babylonish, which happened afterwards. As to the third objection, it is possible Manasseh might be then engaged in the defence of fome other part of his kingdom, and therefore had intrusted Joakim with the management of all affairs at Jerufalem during his absence. And if he were the Eliakim mentioned in the 22d chapter of Ifaiah, and, as chief minister of state, was then invested with all that amplitude of trust and power as is there deforibed, that might be reason enough for him only to be made mention mention of in this transaction, without naming of his master at all therein.

But, lastly, To give a satisfactory answer to the fourth chiection, I must confess is not in my power. Could we put this history so far back, as the minority of Manasseh, this would not only afford us an answer to this objection, but would also give us a much clearer one to the last preceding. For then there would be reason enough, not to mention the minor king, but only the chief minister and guardian of the kingdom, in the transacting of the whole affair: and the death of jurith would, on this supposition, be at such a distance from the destruction of the Jewish state, as not to make this objection unanswerable. But the wickedness of the pupil will not allow him to have been bred under so good a man for his governor, as Eliakim is described to be. And what is faid in the 18th and 19th verses of the fifth chapter of Judith, concerning the captivity and restoration of the Jews, and is retained also in Jerome's version, must necessarily refer the matters 'therein related, to those times which followed the captivity of Manasieh, and the restoration of him and his people again to their own land. And the chronology of this history will not permit the beginning of it to fall any where else, but in the 12th year of Saolduchinus, and the last of Deioces; and these two characters of the time exactly concurring, according to Herodotas and Ptolemy, do unavoidably determine us to fix it here. However, our not being able to clear this difficulty, is not a fufficient reason for us to reject the whole history. There is fcarce any hiftory written, but what, to the next age after, may appear, as to time, place, and other circumftances, with those feeming inconfistencies, as cannot then be easily reconciled, when the memory of men begin to fail concerning them. And how much more then, may we be apt to blunder, when we take our view at the diffance of above two thousand years, and have no other light to differn the fo far diffant object by than fuch glimmerings from broken scraps of history, as leave us next door to groping in the dark for whatfoever knowledge we get by them? That which feemeth most probable in this case is, that the writer of this book, the more to magnify his heroine, attributed too long a continuance to that peace, which was by her obtained for the land: a for, according to this account, it must have lasted at least eighty years: which being what they never had enjoyed from the time they were a nation, or what scarce any other nation ever had, I would rather choose to allow a siction in this particular, than for the sake of it condemn the whole book as such, which seemeth to carry with it the air of a true history in all other particulars.

a For, allowing her to have been 45 years old at the time of her killing Holofernes, there must be 50 years after to the time of her de th, and "a long time after" in the text (Judith xvi. 25.) cannot imply less than 20 years more. But if we suppose her to be but 25 at the killing of Holoternes (which is more likely) it will carry down the computation even beyond the destruction of Jerusalem, which makes the objection much stronger.

However, I must acknowledge, that what is above said in the defence of this book, for its being a true history, doth not fo far clear the matter, especially in respect of the fourth objection, but that if any one will still contend, that it is only a religious romance, and not a true history; that, according to the intention of the author, the scene of it was put under the reign of Xerxes, when a Joakim, the fon of Joshua, was high priest, and the civil government of Judea, as well as the ecclefiaftical, was in the hands of that officer; and that the inconsistency of so many particulars in that book, with the state and transactions of those times, was only from the ignorance of the author in the history of the faid times, and his unskilfulness in placing the scene of his story in them; I fay, if any one will infift on all this, notwithstanding what is above faid, I shall not enter into any controversy with him about it; only thus much I must insist on, that if it be a true history (which I am inclined most to think, though I will not be positive in it), it can fall no where else, but in the time where I have laid it.

After the death of Deioces, b Phraortes his fon succeeded in the kingdom of Media, and reigned over it twenty-two years.

An. 643. Manafi.51. In the fifty-first year of Manasseh, died c Saosdu-chinus, king of Babylon and Astyria, and Chynilada-nus reigned in his stead.

Manasseh, king of Judah, after he had reigned fifty-five years, and lived fixty-seven, dided at Jerusalem; and not-withstanding his fignal repentance, since his former wickedness had been so great, they would not allow him the honour of being buried in the sepulchres of the tons of David, but laid him in a grave made for him in his own garden.

After Manasseh reigned Ammon his son; who, imitating the first part of his sather's reign, rather than the latter, gave himself up to all manner of wickedness and impiety; whereon the servants of his house conspired against him, and slew him after he had reigned two years.

^a Nehemiah xii. 10. 26.

b Herodotus lib. 1.

c Canon Ptolemæi.

^e 2 Kings xxi. 18. - 2 Chron. xxiii. 20.

BOOK I.

But the people of the land feverely revenged the murder; putting them all to death, that had any hand in it. However, they would not give him in his burial the honour of a place among the fepulchres of the fons of David, but buried him in the garden by his father; which shews, that though they condemned the wickedness of his reign, they would not allow of the violence that was offered to his person; though it may well be supposed, that nothing less than the highest tyranny and oppression could have provoked his own domestics to it.

After the death of Ammon, a Josiah his son succeeded him in the kingdom, being then but eight years old. But having the happiness to fall under the conduct of better guardians in his minority, than did Manasseh his grandfather, he proved, when grown up, a prince of very extraordinary worth; equalling in piety, virtue, and goodness, if not exceeding herein, the best of his predecessors.

Although Ammon reigned but two years, yet the beginning of the reign of Josiah, is here put at the distance of three years from the beginning of the first year of Ammon, because the odd months of the reign of Hezekiah, Manasseh, and Ammon, over and above the round number of years, which they are said to have reigned, do by this time amount to a whole year more, which the chronology of the ensuing history makes necessary to be here supposed.

In the 6th year of Josiah, b Phraortes, king of Media, having brought under him all the upper Asia (which is all that lay north of Mount Taurus, from Media to the Josiah 6.

river Halys), and made the Persians also to become subject unto him, elated his thoughts on these successes, to the revenging of himself upon the Assyrians for his father's death, and accordingly marched with a great army against them, and, having made himself master of the country, laid siege to Nineveh itself, the capital of the empire. But he had there the missortune to meet with the same ill sate that his father had in the former war; for, being overthrown in the attempt, he and all his army perished in it.

Josiah, in the 68th year of his reign, being now fixteen years old, took on him the administration of the kingdom, and, beginning with the reformation of religion, endeavoured to purge it of all those corruptions, which had been introduced in the time of Ammon and Manafieh, his father, and grabdfather; and did fet his heart to feek the Lord his God with all his might, as did David his father.

Cyaxares

² 2 Kings xxii. 2 Chron. xxxiv. ^c 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3. ^b Herodotus, lib. t.

Cyaxares, the fon of Phraortes a, having succeeded his father in the kingdom of Media, as foon as he had well fettled himself in the government, drew together a great army to be revenged. on the Assyrians for the late loss, and, having overthrown them in a great battle, led the Medes the fecond time to the fiege of Nineveh; but, before he could make any progress therein, he was called off to defend his own territories against a new enemy. For the Scythians, from the parts about the Palus Meotis, passing round the Caucasus, had made a great inroad upon them; whereby he was forced to leave Nineveh to march against them. But he had not the same success in this war, which he had against the Affyrians; for the Scythians, having vanguished him in battle, dispossessed him of all the upper Afia, and reigned there twenty-eight years; during which time, they enlarged their conquests into Syria, and as far as the borders of Egypt. But there Pfammitichus, king of Egypt, having met them, prevailed with intreaties and large gifts, that they proceeded no farther; and thereby faved his country from this dangerous invasion. In this expedition, they feized on Bethihean, a city in the territories of the tribe of Manasseh on this fide Jordan, and kept it as long as they continued in Afia; and therefore, from them it was afterwards called Cythopolis, or the city of the Scythians But how far the ravages of those barbarians might affect Judea is no where faid, although there can be no doubt, but that those parts, as well as the rest of Palestine, both in their march to the borders of Egypt, and also in their return from thence, must have suffered much by them. It is related of them, that in their passage through the land of the Philistines, on their return from Egypt, some of the stragglers robbed the temple of Venus at Askelon, and that for the punishment hereof they and their posterity were afflicted with emerods for a long while after; which lets us know, that the Philistines had till then fill preserved the memory of what they had formerly suffered on the account of the d ark of God. For, from that time, it feems, they looked on this difease, as the proper punishment from the hand of God, for all fuch like facrilegious impieties: and for this reason assigned it to the Scythians in their histories, on their charging of them there with this crime.

Josiah, in the c 12th year of his reign, being now twenty years old, and having farther improved himself in the knowledge of God and his laws, proceeded according hereto farther to perfect that reformation,

which

a Herodotus, lib. 1.

b Syncellus, p. 214.

⁶ Herodotus, lib. 1.

d i Sam. v.

c 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3. 4. 5. &c.

which he had begun. And therefore, making a strict inquiry, by a general progress through the land, after all the relics of idolatry which might be any where remaining therein, he broke down all the altars of Baalim with the idols erected on high hefore them, and all the high-places, and cut down the groves and broke in pieces all the carved images, and the molten images, and digged up the graves of the idolatrous priests, and burnt their bones upon all places of idolatrous worship, thereby to pollute and defile them for ever; and when he had thus cleanfed all Judah and Jerusalem, he went into the cities of Ephraim and Manasseh, and all the rest of the land, that had formerly been possessed by the ten tribes of Israel (for all this was then subject to him), and there did the same thing.

In the 13th year of Josiah, a Jeremiah was called to the prophetic office, which he afterwards executed for above 40 years, in warning Judah and Jerusalem of the wrath of God impending on them for their iniquities, and in calling them to repentance for the averting of it; till at length, on their continuing wholly obdurate in their evil ways, it was poured out in full measure upon both in a most calamitous destruction.

In the 15th year of Josiah, Chyniladanus, king of Babylon and Assyria, having, by his esseminacy and unprositableness in the state, made himself contemptible to his people, b Nabopollassar, who was general of his army, took this advantage to set up for himself, and, being a Babylonian by birth, made use of his interest there to seize that part of the Assyrian empire, and reigned king of Babylon twenty-one years.

Jossah, c in the 18th year of his reign, took especial care for the repairing of the house of God, and therefore sent several of the chief officers of his court to take an actional feveral of the money collected for it, and to lay his command upon tilkiah the high priest, that he should see it be forthwith laid out in the doing of the work; so that all might be put in thorough repair. The high priest, in pursuance of this order, took a general view of the house, to seewhat was necessfary to be done; and, while he was thus examining every pince, he found the authentic copy of the law of Moses. This ought to have been laid up 4 on the side of the ark of the covenant in the most holy place; but it was taken out thence and a Jer. i. 2. and xxv. 3.

b Alexander Potyhirdor apud Eufebium in Chronico, p. 46. et apud Syncellum, p. 210.

c 2 Kings xxii. 2 Chron. xxxiv, d Deut. xxxi. 26.

hid elsewhere in the time of Manasleh, as it is conjectured, that it might not be destroyed by him in the time of his iniquity. This book Hilkiah fent to the king by Shaphan the fcribe, who, on his delivering of it to the king, did, by his command, read some part of it to him. The place, which on the opening of the book he happened on, was (fay the Jewish doctors) that part of the 28th chapter of Deuteronomy, wherein are dencunced the curses of God against the people of Israel, and against the king in particular (ver. 26.), in case they should not keep the law which he had commanded them. On the hearing of this, Josiah rent his clothes through grief, and was feized with great fear and consternation, on the account both of himself and his people, as knowing how much they and their fathers had transgressed this law, and dreading the curses denounced against them for it. To eafe his mind under this trouble and anxiety of his thoughts, he fent Hilkiah the high priest with several of his officers to Huldah the prophetess, to inquire of the Lord. The answer, which they brought back, was a fentence of destruction upon Judah and Jerusalem; but that as to Josiah, because of his repentance, the execution of it should be delayed till after his days. However, the good king, to appeale the wrath of God, as much as lay in his power, called together a folemn affembly of all the elders and people of Judah and Jerusalem; and, going up with them to the temple, caused the law of God to be there read to them, and after that both king and people publicly entered into a folemn covenant to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all their heart and all their foul; and to perform all the words of the covenant that were written in that book. And after this he made another progress through the land to purge it of all other abominations of idolatry or other wickedness, which might be ftill remaining in it, which he throughly rooted out in all parts of his kingdom in fuch manner, as is in the 23d chapter of the 2d book of Kings at large related. And particularly he defroyed the altar and high-place, which feroboam had built at Bethel, first polluting them by burning on them the bones of men, taken out of their fepulchres near adjoining, and then breaking down the altar, and burning the high-place, and the grove, and stamping them all to powder; whereby he fulfilled what had been a prophefied of him by name many ages before in the time of Jeroboam. And he did the same in all the rest of the cities of Samaria, destroying every remainder of idolatry, which he could any where find in any of them. And, when the next paffover approached, he caused that feast to be kept with so great a solemnity and coucourfe course of people from all parts of the land, that it not only exceeded the passover of Hezekiah, which is afore mentioned. but all other passovers from the days of Samuel the prophet to that time.

By the behaviour both of the high priest, as well as of the king, at the finding of the book of the law, it plainly appears, that neither of them had feen any copy of it before; which shews into how corrupt a state the church of the Jews was then funk, till this good king reformed it: for although Hezekiah a kept scribes on purpose to collect together and write out copies of the holy scriptures, yet, through the iniquity of the times that after followed in the reigns of Manaffeb and Ammon, they had either been fo destroyed, or else so neglected and loft, that there were then none of them left in the land, unlefs in some few private hands, where they were kept up and concealed till this copy was found in the temple: and therefore, after this time (by the care, we may be affured, of this religious prince), were written out those copies of the law, and other holy fcriptures then in being, which were preserved after the captivity, and out of which Ezra made his edition of them, in such a manner as will be hereafter related.

In the 24th year of Josiah, b died Psammitichus, king of Egypt, after he had reigned fifty-four years, and was fucceeded by Necus, his fon, the same who in fcripture is called Pharaoh Necho, and often mentioned there under that name. He made an attempt to join the Nile and the Red sea, by drawing a canal from the one to the other; but, after he had confumed an hundred and twenty thousand men in the work, he was forced to defist from it. But he had better fuccess in another undertaking; for, having gotten some of the expertest of the Phoenician failors into his fervice, he c fent them out by the Red lea through the straits of Babelmandel, to discover the coasts of Africa; who, having failed round it, came home the third year through the straits of Gibraltar, and the Mediterranean sea, which was a very extraordinary voyage to be made in these days, when the use of the loadstone was not known. This voyage was performed about two thousand one hundred years before Vasquez. de Gama, a Portuguese, by discovering the Cape of Good Hope, A.D. 1497, found out the same way from hence to the Indies, by which these Phoenicians came from thence. Since that, it hath been made the common passage thither from all these western parts of the world.

In the 20th year of the reign of Josiah, which was the 23d Vol. I.

Prov. xxv. z. b Herodot, lib. z.

Herodot, lib. :

of Cyaxares in the kingdom of Media, a Nabopolla-An. 612. far, king of Babylon, having made an affinity with Josiah 29. Astyages, the eldest son of Cyaxares, by the marriage of Nebuchadnezzar, his fon, with Amyitis, the daughter of Aftyages, entered into a confederacy with him against the Assyrians; and thereon, joining their forces together, they belieged Ninevel; and, after having taken the place, and flain Saracus the king (who was either the fucceffor of Chyniladanus, or he himself under another name), to gratify the Medes, they utterly destroyed that great and ancient city; and from that time Babylon became the fole metropolis of the Affyrian empire. From the time that Esarhaddon obtained the kingdom of Babylon b, both cities equally had this honour, the kings fometimes refiding at Nineveh, and fometimes at Babylon; but after this Nineveh loft it for ever: for, although there was another city afterwards erected out of the ruins of old Nineveh, which for a long time bore the same name, yet it never attained to the grandeur and glory of the former. It is at this day called Moful, and is only famous for being the feat of the patriarch of the Nestorians, of which sect are most of the Christians in those parts. It is fituated on the west fide of the river Tigris, where was anciently only a fuburb of the old Nineveh; for the city itself stood on the east side of the river, where are to be feen some of its ruins of great extent even unto this day. According to a Diodorus Siculus, the circuit of Ninevell was 480 furlongs, which make 60 of our miles. And hence it is, that it is faid in Jonah to be a city of three days journey, that is in compass, for 20 miles is as much as a man can well go in a day. Strabo f faith of it, that it was much bigger than Babylon; and in the fame place he tells us, that the circuit of Babylon was 38; furlongs, that is, 48 of our miles. The phrase much bigger may well extend to the other twelve miles to make it up fixty.

In this destruction of Nineveh was sulfilled the prophecies of & Jonah, h Nahum, and i Zephaniah, against it. And we are told in the book of k Tobit, that Tobias his son lived to hear of it, and that it was accomplished by Nabuchodonosor and Assuerus, which exactly agrees with the account which, out of Alexander Polyhistor, I have just above given of it. For that

^a Euschii Chronicon, p. 124. A-lexander Polyhiftor apud Syncellun, p. 210. et apud Euschium in Chronico, p. 46. Herodot. lib. 1.

b Strabo, lib. 16. p. 734.

C Thevenot's Travels, part 2. book 2. 6.11. p. 50.

d Lib. 2.

e Jonah iii. 3.

f Lib. 16. p. 737.

g Chap. iii.

h Chap. ii. and iii.

i Chap. ii. 13.

k Chap. xiv. 15.

that the Assurus here mentioned was Astyages, appears from Daviel; for Darius the Mede, who was Cyaxares, the fon of Aftyages, is there called the fon a of Ahafuerus: and Nabuchodonofor was a name among the Babylonians commonly given to their kings, as that of Pharaoh was among the Egyptians. And that Nabopollafar in particular was so called, not only appears from b the rabbinical writings of the Jews, but also from Josephus himself, a writer, by reason of his antiquity, of much better authority in this matter. For, in his Antiquities, where he is speaking of this same king, he calls him in a quotation, which is there brought out of Berofus, by the name of Nabuchodonofor; and afterwards, d in his book against Apion, repeating the fame quotation, he there calls him Nabullafar, the fame by contraction with Nabopollafar; which plainly proves him to have been called by both these names. I know there are those who take upon them, from this passage in the book against Apion, to mend that in the Antiquaties, and put Nabopollasar in both places; but I see no reason for it but their own fancy. Others may, with as good authority, from the passage in the Antiquities, mend that in the book against Apion, and put Nabuchodonosor in both places. It is certain the books of Tobit and Judith can never be reconciled with any other ancient writings, either facred or profane, which relate to those times, unless we allow Nabuchodonosor to have been a name common to the kings of Babylon.

The archbishop of Armagh hath put this destruction of Nineveh 14 years earlier, that is, in the last year of Chyniladanus in the canon of Ptolemy, for no other reason, I suppose, but that he reckoned that the end of his life and the end of his reign in that canon happened both at the same time, and both together in the destruction of that city: whereas, the computation of that canon being by the years of the kings that reigned at Babvlon, Chyniladanus's reign there must end where Nabopoliasar's begun, whether he then died or no, as it is most probable he did not, but that he continued to hold the kingdom of Assyria after he had lost that of Babylon, and that it was not till some time after that loss that Nineveh was destroyed: for Eusebius placeth the destruction of Nineveh in the 23d year of the reign of Cyaxares; and to put it back 14 years, to the last of Chynila-a Daniel ix. 7.

b In Juch sfin, Nebuchadnezar is called Nebuchadnezzar, the for of Nebuch dnezzar, fol. 136.; and D vid Gaoz, under the year of the world 3285, calls the father Nebuchaunezzar the first, and the fon Nebuchadnezzar the fecond.

[&]quot; Josep' us Antiq. lib. 10. c. 11.

d lib.

^{*} In Annalibus Veteris Testamenti sub anno mundi.

danus in the canon, will make it fall in the 9th year of Cyaxares, which is too early either for his fon Astyages to have a daughter marriageable, or for Nebuchadnezzar to be of age sufficient to take her to wife: for, after this rate, Nebuchadnezzar must be allowed to have been at the least 85 years old at the time of his death, and Astyages much older, which is an age very unlikely for such to live, who usually waste their lives, both by luxury and satigue, much saster than other men.

At the destruction of this city of Nineveh ended the book of Tobit. It was first written b in Chaldee by some Babylonian Jew, and feems, in its original draught, to have been the memoirs of the family to which it relates; first begun by Tobit, then continued by Tobias, and lastly finished by some other of the family, and afterwards digested by the Chaldee author into that form in which we now have it. Jerome b translated it out of the Chaldee into Latin, and his translation is that which we have in the vulgar Latin edition of the Bible. But there is a Greek version much ancienter than this; for we find it made use of by Polycarp, Clemens Alexandrinus, and other fathers, who were before Jerome; and from this hath been made the Syriac version, and also that which we have in English among the apocryphal writers in our Bible. But the Chaldee original is not now extant. The Hebrew copies which go about of this book, as well as that of Judith, feem both to be of c a modern composure. It being easier to settle the chronology of this book than that of the book of Judith, it hath met with much lefs opposition from learned men, and is generally looked on, both by Jews and Christians, as a genuine and true history; though, as to some matters in it (as particularly that of the angel's accompanying of Tobias in a long journey under the shape of Azarias, the story of Raguel's daughter, the frighting away of the devil by the imoke of the heart and liver of a fish, and the curing of Tobit's blindness by the gall of the same fish), it is much less reconcileable to a rational credibility; for these things look more like the fictions of Homer than the writings of a facred historian, and give an objection against this book which doth not lie against the other. However, it may excellently well ferve to reprefent unto us the duties of charity and patience, in the example of Tobit's ready helping his brethren in diffress to the utmost of his power,

^{*} For, according to this account, this marriage must have been 27 years before Nebuchaduezzar began to reign, and he reigned 43 years; and it must also have been 31 years before Asyages began to reign, and he reigned 30 years.

b Præfatio Hieronymi in Tobiam.

They are generally thought to have been made by Munfler.

that

power, and his bearing with a pious submission the calamities of his captivity, poverty, and blindness, as long as inflicted upon him. The Latin and Greek versions of this book, which I have mentioned, do much differ, each having fome particulars in it which are wanting in the other. But here the Latin version must give place to the Greek. For a Jerome made is, before he himself understood Chaldee, by the help of a learned Jew, from whose mouth, he tells us, he wrote down in Latin what the other rendered into Hebrew from the original, and in this manner finished the whole work in one day's time; and a work fo done must undoubtedly have abundance of mistakes as well as inaccuracies in it. But his translation b of Judith was made afterwards, when, by his further studies in the oriental languages, he had rendered himself as much master of the Chaldee as he was before of the Hebrew; and he did it with great care, comparing diligently many various copies, and making use only of such as he found to be the best; and therefore his vertion of that book may well deferve an authority beyoud the Greek, which cannot be claimed for the other. If the copy which Jerome translated his Tobit from were a true copy, and he were not mistaken in the version, there is one pasfage in it which abfolutely overthrows the whole authority of the book: for (ch. xiv. 7.) there is mention made of the temple of Jerusalem as then burnt and destroyed, which makes the whole of it utterly inconfiftent with the times in which it is placed. The Greek version, as also the English, which is taken from it, I acknowledge, fpeak only prophetically of it, as of that which was to be done, and not historically, as of that which was already done, as Jerome's doth. However, this Latin edition is that which the church of Rome hath canonized. If the hiftorical ground-plot of the book be true, which is the most that can be said of it, yet certainly it is interlarded with many fictions of the invention of him that wrote it.

The Babylonians and the Medes having thus destroyed Nineveh, as is above related, they became so formidable hereon, as raised the jealousy of all their neighbours; and therefore, to put a stop to their growing greatness, "Necho, king of Egypt, in the 31st year of King Josiah, marched with a great army towards the Euphrates to make war upon them. The words of Josephus are, "That it was to make war upon the Medes and Babylonians, who had dissolved the Assyrian empire;" which plainly shews, that this war was commenced immediately upon

^a Hieronymi Præfatio in Tobiam.

d Josephus Antiq. lib. 10. c. 6.

b Hieronymi Præfatio in Librum Judith.

⁶ Herodotus, lib. 2. Josephus Antiq lib. 10. c. 6.

that diffolution, and confequently, that the destruction of Nineveh, whereby this diffolution was brought to pass, was just before this war, in the year where, according to Eusebius, I have placed it.

On Necho's taking his way through Judea, a Josiah resolved to impede his march; and therefore, getting together his forces, he posted himself in the valley of Megiddo, there to stop his passage: whereon Necho sent ambassadors unto him, to let him know, that he had no design upon him, that the war he was engaged in was against others; and therefore advised him not to meddle with him, less it should turn to his hurt. But Josiah not hearkening thereto, on Necho's marching up to the place where he was posted to stop his passage, it there cause to a battle between them; wherein Josiah was not only overthrown, but also unfortunately received a wourd, of which, on his return to Jerusalem, he there died, after he had reigned thirty-one years.

It is the notion of many, that Josiah engaged rashly and unadvifedly in this war, upon an over confidence in the merit of his own righteouf ess; as if God, for this reason, must necesfarily have given him fuccess in every war which he should engage himself in. But this would be a presumption very unworthy of fo religious a person. There was another reason that engaged him in this undertaking, which hath been above hinted at. From the time of Manasseh's restoration, the kings of Judah were homagers to the kings of Babylon, and bound by oath to adhere to them against all their enemies, especially against the Fgyptians, and to defend that border of their empire against them; and, for this purpose, they seem to have had conferred on them, the rest of the land of Canaan, that which had formerly been possessed by the other ten tribes, till conquered from them by the Affyrians. It is certain lofiah had the whole land of Ifrael in the same extent in which it had been held by David and Solomon, before it was divided into two kingdoms. For his reformation went through all of it; and it was executed by him, not only in Bethel (where one of Jeroboan.'s calves stood, but also in every other part thereof, and with the same sovereign authority as in Judea itself; as d therefore he must have been king of the whole. And it is to be remarked, that the battle was fought, not within the territories of Judea, but at Megiddo, a town of the tribe of Manaffel, lying in the a iddle of the kingdom of Ifrael, where Josish would have had nothing to do, had he not been king of that kingdom alfo, as well as of the other of Judah: and he could have had it no otherwise, but by grant from the king of a Kings xxxiii. 29. 30. 2 Chron. xxxv. 20:---25.

Babylon, a province of whose empire it was made by the conquest of it, first begun by Tiglath-Pileser, and afterwards suished by Salmaneser and Esarbaddon. And if this grant was not upon the express conditions which I have mentioned, yet whatfoever other terms there were of this concession, most certainly fidelity to the fovereign paramount, and a steady adherence to his interest, against all his enemies, was always required in such cases, and an oath of God exacted for the performance hereof. And it is not to be doubted, but that Josiah had taken such an oath to Nabopollafar, the then reigning king of Babylon, as Jehoiakim and Zedekiah afterwards did to Nebuchadnezzar, his fon and fuccessor in that empire; and therefore, should Josiah, when under fuch an obligation, have permitted an enemy of the king of Babylon to pass through his country to make war upon him, without any opposition, it would plainly have amounted to a breach of his oath, and a violation of that fidelity which he had in the name of his God fworn unto him, which fo good and just a man as Josiah was could not but absolutely detest. For, although the Romanists make nothing of breaking faith with heretics, yet the breaking of faith with an heathen was condemned a by God himfelf in Jehoiakim and Zedekiah; and most certainly it would have been condemned in Josiah also. had he become guilty of it; which being what a person so well instructed in religion as Josiah was could not but be thoroughly convinced of, the fense which he had of his duty, in this particular, feems folely to have been that which engaged him in this war, in which he perished: and with him perished all the glory, honour, and prosperity of the Jewish nation; for, after that, nothing else enfued but a difmal scene of God's judgements upon the land, till, at length, all Judah and Jerusalem were swallowed up by them in a woful destruction.

The death of fo excellent a prince was defervedly lamented by all his people, and by none more than by Jeremiah, the prophet, who had a thorough fense of the greatness of the loss, and also a full forefight of the great calamities that were afterwards to follow upon the whole people of the Jews; and therefore, while his heart was full with the view of both, he wrote b a fong of lamentation upon this doleful occasion, as he afterwards did another upon the destruction of Jerusalem. This class is that which we still have; the other is not now extant.

Megiddo, where the battle was fought, was a city d in the tribe

^a Ezek. xvi. 13—19. b 2 Chron. xxxv. 25. c This last, referring throughout to the destruction of Jerusalem, could not be that which was wrote upon the death of Jofiah. J Joshua xvii. 11. Judges i. 27.

tribe of Manasseh, on this side Jordan, which is by Herodotus called Magdolum, nigh it was the town of Hadad-Rimmon, afterwards called a Maximianopolis; and therefore the lamentation for the death of Josiah is in scripture called the "Lamentation of Hadad-Rimmon in the valley of Megiddo;" which was so great for this excellent prince, and so long continued, b that the lamentation of Hadad-Rimmon afterwards became a proverbial phrase for the expressing of any extraordinary sorrow.

This great and general mourning of all the people of Ifrael for the death of this prince, and the prophet Jeremiah's joining fo pathetically with them herein, sheweth in how great a reputation he was with them, which he would not have deferved, had he engaged in this war contrary to the words of that prophet, spoken to him from the mouth of the Lord, as the apocryphal writer of the first book of c Esdras, and others from him, fay; for then he would have died in rebellion against God, and disobedience to his command; and then neither God's prophet, nor God's people, could, in this cafe, without finning against God, have expressed so great an esteem for him as this mourning implied; and therefore this mourning alone is a fufficient proof of the contrary. Besides, it is to be observed, that no part of canonical fcripture gives us the least intimation of it; nor can we from thence have any reason or ground to believe, that there was any fuch word from the Lord by the prophet Jeremiah, or any other prophet, to recal Josiah from this war. All that is faid of it is from the apocryphal book I have mentioned; of which it may be truly faid, that where it is not a transcript from Ezra, or some other canonical scripture, it is no more than a bundle of fables, too abfurd for the belief of the Romanists themselves (for they have not taken this book into their canonical scripture, though they have those of Tobit and of Bel and the Dragon); and therefore it is deferving of no man's regard in this particular.

It is faid indeed (2 Chr. xxxv. 21.) that Necho fent messengers to Josiah, to tell him, that he was sent of God on this expedition; that God was with him in it; and that to meddle with him would be to meddle with God; and that therefore he cught to forbear, that God destroy him not; and (ver. 22.) that Josiah hearkened not to the word of Necho from the mouth of God. And, from all this put together, some would infer, that Josiah was disobedient to the word of God, in going to that war. But this is utterly inconsistent with the character which is given us in scripture of that religious and excellent prince; and therefore what is here said must not be understood of the true God.

tiic

the Lord Jehovah, who was the God of Ifrael, but of the Egyptian gods, whose oracles Josiah had no reason to have any regard to. For Necho, being an heathen prince, knew not the Lord Jehovah, nor ever confulted his prophets or his oracles: the Egyptian gods were those only whom he worshipped, and whose oracles he consulted; and therefore when he taith he was fent of God on this expedition, and that God was with him, he meant none other than his false Egyptian gods, whom he served: for, wherever the word God occurs in this text, it is not expressed in the Hebrew original by the word Jehovah, which is the proper name of the true God, but by the word Elohim, which, being in the plural number, is equally applicable to the false gods of the heathens, as well as to the true God, who was the God of Israel; and, in the scriptures of the Old Testament, it is equally used for the expressing of the one as well as the other. For, wherever there is occasion therein to speak of those false gods, it is by the word Elohim that they are there mentioned. And, whereas it is faid (ver. 22.), that "Josiah hearkened not to the words of Necho from the mouth of God," (and from hence it is chiefly inferred, that the meffage which Necho fent to Josiah was truly from God), it is to be observed, that the phrase, which we render from the mouth of God, is, in the Hebrew original Mippi Elohim, i. e. from the mouth of Elohim, which may be interpreted of the false gods, as well as of the true God (as hath been already faid), and much rather, in this place, of the former, than of the latter. For, wherever elfe, a through the whole Hebrew text of the holy scriptures, there is mention made of any word coming from the mouth of God, he is there mentioned by the name Jehovah, which determines it to be the true God; and this is the only place, in the whole Hebrew Bible, where, in the use of this phrase, it is expressed otherwise, that is, by the name Elohim, and not by the name Jehovah; which change in the phrase, in this place, is a sufficient proof to me, that there must be here a change in the fignification also, and that the word, which is here faid to come from the mouth of Elohim, is not the same with the word which is, every where else, in the use of this phrase in scripture, said to come from the mouth of schovah, but that Elohim must, in this place, fignify the false gods of the Egyptians; and that from their false oracles only Necho had this word which he fent to Josiah. For what had he to do with any word from the true God, who knew him not, nor ever worshipped him? Or how could any such revelation come to him, who knew not any of his prophets, or ever confulted them? And therefore, most certainly, the word which is here said to come Mippi Elohim, i. e. from the mouth of Elohim, must be understood only of Necho's Elohim, that is, of those false Egyptian gods, whose oracles he consulted, before he undertook this expedition, as it was than usual with heathen princes, on such occasions, to confult the false deluding oracles of the gods they worthipped. And had it been here Mippi Jehovah, i. e. from the mouth of Jehovah, instead of Mippi Elohim, considering who fent the message, it would not have much mended the matter; for Josiah would have had no reason to believe it from fuch a meffenger. When Sennacherib came up against Judah, he fent Hezekiah word, a that the Lord (Jehovah in the Hebrew) faid unto him, Go up against this land, and destroy it. But it was not reckoned a fault in Hezekiah, that he believed him not, neither could it be reckoned a fault in Jofian in doing the fame. For it is certain, that Sennacherib, in so pretending, lied to King Hezekiah; and, why might not Josiah then have as good reason to conclude that Necho, in the like pretence, might have lied also unto him? for God used not to send his word to his fervants by fuch meffengers. But Necho's pretence was not fo large as Sennacherib's; for Sennacherib pretended to be fent by Jehovah, the certain name of the true God, but Necho pretended to be fent only by Elohim, which may be interpreted of his falfe Egyptian gods, as well as of the true God. it feems clear he could mean none other than the former by that word in this text; and therefore Josiah could not be liable to any blame, in not hearkening to any words which came from them.

^a See Deut. viii. 3. Joh. ix. 14. 1 Kings xiii. 21. 2 Chr. xxxvi. 12. 14. i. 20. xl. 5. lviii. 14. lxii. 2. Jer. ix. 12. & xxiii. 16. Micahiv. 4.

After the death of Jossah, b the people of the land took Jehoahaz, his son, who was also called Shallum, and made him king in his stead. He was much unlike his father, for he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, and therefore he was soon tumbled down from his throne into a prison, where he ended his days with misery and disgrace in a strange land.

For Pharaoh-Necho, chaving had the good fuccess, in his expedition, to beat the Babylonians at the Euphrates; and having thereon taken Carchemish, a great city in those parts, and secured it to himself with a good garrison, after three months returned again towards Egypt, and hearing, in his way, that Jehoahaz had taken upon him to be king of Judah, without his consent, dhe sent for him to Riblah in Syria, and, on his arri-

² Kings xviii. 2c. If. xxxvi. 10.

b 2 Kings xxiii. 31. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1.

^c Josephus Antiq. lib. 10. c. 6.

d 2 Kings xxiii. 33. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 3. 4.

val, caused him to be put in chains, and sent him prisoner into Egypt, where he died; and then, proceeding on in his way, came to Jerusalem, where he made a Jehoiakim, another of the sons of Josiah, king, instead of his brother, and put the land to an annual tribute of an b hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold; and after that returned with great triumph into his own kingdom.

Herodotus, making mention of this expedition of Necho's, and also of the battle which he fought at Megiddo (or Magdolum, as he calleth it), c faith, that, after the victory there obtained by him, he took the great city Cadytis, which city he afterwards describes to be a mountainous city in Palestine, of the bigness of Sardis in Lydia, the chief city of all Leffer Afia in those times; by which description, this city, Cadytis, could be none other than Jerusalem; for that is situated in the mountains of Palestine, and there was then no other city in those parts which could be equalled to Sardis but that only: and it is certain, from scripture, that, after this battle, Necho did take jerusalem, for he d was there when he made lehoiakim king. There is, I confess, no mention of this name, either in the scriptures, or in Josephus; but that it was however called fo, in the time of Herodotus, by the Syrians and Arabians, doth appear from this, that it is called by them, and all the eastern nations, by no other name but one of the same original, and the same fignification, even to this day; for Jerusalem is a name now altogether as strange among them, as Cadytis is to us. They all call it by the name of Al-kuds, which fignifies the fame that Cadytis doth, that is, The Holy: For, from the time that Solomon built the temple at Jerusalem, and it was thereby made to all Ifrael the common place of their religious worship, this epithet of The Holy was commonly given unto it; and therefore we find it thenceforth called, in the facred writings of the Old Testament, f Air Hakkodesh, i. e. the City of Holiness, or the Holy City, and so also in 8 feveral places in the New Testament. And this same title they

^a This Jehoiakim was elder brother to Jehoahaz; for the latter was but 3 years old when the other was 25. 2 Kings xxiii. 31. 36. and yet the people, on the death of Josiah, chose Jehoahaz to succeed him.

b The whole annual tribute, as here taxed, came to 52,200 l. of our money.

⁶ Herodotus, lib. 22.

d 2 Chron. xxxvi. 3.

Golii Notæ ad Ålfraganum, p. 137. Sandy's Travels, b. 3. p. 155. Baudrandi Geographia, fub vo-e Hierofolyma.

f Neh. xi. 1. & 18. 11. xlviii. 2. and c. lii. 1. Dan. ix. 24.

g Matth. iv. 5. & xxvii. 53. Rev. xxi. 2.

they gave it in their coins, for the infcription of their shekels (many of which are still extant) was a Jerusalem Kedushah, i.e. Jerusalem the Holy; and this coin going current among the neighbouring nations, especially after the Babylonish captivity had made a dispersion of that people over all the East, it carried this name with it among them; and they from hence called this city by both names, Jerusalem Kedushah, and at length, for shortneis fake, Kedushah only, and the Syrians (who in their dialect usually turned the Hebrew sh into th, Kedutha. And the Syriac, in the time of Herodotus, being the only language that was then spoken in Palestine (the Hebrew having been no more used there, or any where else, as a vulgar language, after the Babylonish captivity, he found it, when he travelled through that country, to be called there in the Syriac dialect Kedutha, from whence, by giving it a Greek termination, he made it, in the Greek language, Kadovis, or Cadytis, in his history, which he wrote about the time that Nehemiah ended his twelve years government at Jerusalem. And, for the same reason that it was called Kedushah, or Kedutha, in Syria and Palestine, the Arabs, in their language, called it b Bait Alo okdes, i. e. the Holy Buildings, or the Holy City, and often, with another adjective of the fame root, and the fame fignification, Bait Alkuds, and at length simply Alkuds, i. e. the Holy, by which name only c it is now called by the Turks, Arabs, and all other nations of the Mahometan religion in those parts. And that it may not look strange to prove an ancient name by the modern name which is now given that place, it is neceffary I acquaint the reader, that the Arabs being the ancientest nation in the world (who have never been by any conquest dispossessed, or driven out of their country, but have there always remained in a continued defcent from the first planters of it even to this day), and being also as little given to make changes in their manners and utages, as they are as to their country, they have still retained those names of places which were at first given them, and on their getting the empire of the East, restored them again to many of them, after they had been for feveral ages extinct, by the intermediate changes that had happened in them. And thus d the ancient metropolis of Egypt, which, from Mizraim, the fon of Ham, the first planter of that country after the flood, was called Mefri,

^{. &}lt;sup>a</sup> See Lightfont's Works, vol. 1. p. 497. and vol. 2. p. 303. and Walton's Apparatus refere the Polyglot B.ble, p. 36. 37.

b Gom Notæ ad Alfraganum, p. 137.

Sundy's Trevels, b. 3, p. 155. Baudrandi Geog, fubvoce Hierofolyma, d Bocharti Phaleg, part 1, lib. 4, c. 24. Golii Notæ ad Alfraganum, g. 152, 153, &c.

and afterwards for many ages had the name of Memphis, was, on the Arabs making themselves masters of Egypt again, called Mefri, and hath retained that name ever fince, though, by the building of Cairo on the other fide of the Nile over against it (for Mefri stands on the west side of that river), that ancient and once noble city is now brought in a manner to defolation. And for the same reason the city of Tyrus, which was anciently called * Zor or Zur (from whence the whole country of Syria had its name), hath, fince it fell into the hands of the Arabs, on the erecting of the empire in the east, been again called b Sor, and is at this day known by no other name in those parts. And by the fame means the city of Palmyra hath again recovered the old name of Tadmor, by which it was called c in the time of Solomon, and is now known in the east by no other name: and abundance of other like instances might be given in the east to this purpose, and the like may be found nearer home. For it is well known that the Welsh, in their language, do still call all the cities in England by the old British names, by which they were called 1300 years ago, before the Saxons dispossessed them of this country; and should they recover it again, and here get the dominion over it as formerly, no doubt they would again restore to all places here the same British names, by which they still call them.

Jehoiakim, on his taking on him the kingdom, followed the example of his brother d in doing that which was evil; for he went on in his steps to relax all the good

An. 6cg. Jehoiak. r.

order and discipline of his father, as the other had done, and the people (who never went heartily into that good king's reformation), gladly laying hold hereof, did let themfelves loofe to the full bent of their own depraved inclinations; and run into all manner of iniquity; whereon the prophet Jeremiah, being fent of God, e first went into the king's house, and there proclaimed God's judgements against him and his family. if he went on in his iniquities, and did not amend and repent of them; and after that f he went up into the temple, and there fpoke to all the people that came up thither to worship, after the same manner, declaring unto them, that if they would turn from their evil ways, God would turn from his wrath, and repent of a So it is called in the original Hebrew text of the Old Testament, wherever there is mention of this city therein.

b Golii notæ ad Alfraganum, p. 130. and 131. Baudrandi Geog. fold voce Tyrus. Thevenot's Travels, b. 2. c. 60. p. 220, c 1 Kings ix. 18. 2 Chron. viii. 4.

d 2 Kings xxiii. 37. 2 Chren. xxxvi. 5.

e Jer. xxii.

[&]quot; Jer. xxvi.

the evil which he purposed to bring upon them; but that, if they would not hearken unto him to walk in the law of God. and keep his commandments, then the wrath of God should be poured out upon them, and both that city and the temple should be brought to utter desolation: which angering the priests that then attended in the temple, they laid hold of him, and brought him before the king's council to have him put to death. But Ahikam, one of the chief lords of the council, fo befriended Jeremiah, that he brought him off, and got him discharged by the general fuffrage, not only of the princes, but also of all the elders of the people that were then prefent. This Ahikam was a the father of Gedaliah, that was afterwards made governor of the land under the Chaldeans, and the fon of Shaphan the scribe (who was b chief minister of state under King Josiah) and brother c to Gemariah, d Elasah, and e Jazaniah, who were great men in those days, and members also of the council with him; and therefore, in conjunction with them, he had a great interest there, which he made use of on this occasion to deliver the prophet from that mischief which was intended against him.

But f Uriah, another prophet of the Lord, who had this same year prophesied after the same manner, could not so come off. For Jehoiakim was so incensed against him for it, that he sought to put him to death; whereon Uriah sled into Egypt. But this did not secure him from his revenge; for he sent into Egypt after him, and, having procured him to be there seized, brought him up from thence, and slew him at Jerusalem; which became a further enhancing of his iniquity, and also of God's wrath against him for it.

About the fame time also prophesied the prophet Habakkuk, and Zephaniah, who, being called to the prophetic office in the reign of Josiah, continued (as seems most likely) to this time; for they prophesied the same things that Jeremiah did, and upon the same occasion, s that is, destruction and desolation upon Judah and Jerusalem, because of the many heinous sins they were then guilty of. Zephaniah doth not name the Chaldeans, who were to be the executioners of this wrath of God upon them, but habakkuk doth. As to Habakkuk, neither the time in which he lived, nor the parents from whom he was descended, are any where named in scripture; but he prophesying the coming

a 2 Kings xxv. 22.

b 2 Kings xxii.
c Jer. xxxvi. 10.

d Jer. xxix. 3.

Fzek, viii, 11. From which place it is inferred, that Jazaniah was then prefident of the Sanhedrin.

f Jer. xxvi. 20-23.

⁸ Hab. i. 1-11. Zeph. i. 1-18-

h Hab, i. 5.

ming of the Chaldeans in the same manner as Jeremiah did, this gives reason to conjecture that he lived in the same time. Of Zephaniah it is directly said, a that he prophesied in the time of Josiah, and in his pedigree (which is also given us) his sather's grandfather is called a Hezekiah, which, some taking to be King Hezekiah, do therefore reckon this prophet to have been of royal descent.

In the third year of Jehoiakim, b Nabopollafar, king of Babylon, finding that, on Necho's taking of Carchemish, all Syria and Palestine had revolted to him, Jehoiak. 3. and that he being old and infirm, was unable to march thither himself to reduce them; he took Nebuchadnezzar his son into partnership with him in the empire, and c fent him with an army into those parts; and from hence the Jewish computation of the years of Nebuchadnezzar's reign begins, that is, from the end of the third year of Jehoiakim: for it was about the end of that year that this was done; and therefore, according to the Jews, d the fourth year of Jehoiakim was the first year of Nebuchadnezzar; but, according to the Babylonians, his reign is not reckoned to begin till after his father's death, which happened two years afterwards; and both computations being found in scripture, it is necessary to say so much here for the reconciling of them.

In the 4th year of Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar chaving beaten the army of Necho, king of Egypt, at the Euphrates, and retaken Carchemilh, marched towards Syria and Palestine, to recover those provinces again to the Babylonish empire; on whose approach f the Rechabites, who, according to the institution of Jonadab, the son of Rechab, their father, had always abstained from wine, and hitherto only lived in tents, finding no security from this invasion in the open country, retired for their safety to Jerusalem, where was transacted between them and Jeremiah what we find related in the 35th chapter of his prophecies.

This very g fame year Jeremiah prophefied of the coming of Nebuchadnezzar against Judah and Jerusalem, that the whole land should be delivered into his hands, and that a captivity of seventy years continuance should after that ensue upon the people of the Jews; and he also delivered several other prophecies

of

^a Zephaniah i. 1.

b Berofus apud Joseph. Ant. lib. 10. c. 11. et contra Apion. lib. 1.

Daniel i. 1.

d Jer. xxv. 1. Which time 4th year was the 23d from the 13th of John. when Jeremiah first began to prophety, ver. 3.

e Jer. xlvi. r. f Jer. xxxv. 6.--11, fer. xxxv.

of the many calamities and woful defolations, that were then ready to be brought upon them, intending thereby, if possible, to bring them to repentance, that so the wrath of God might be diverted from them.

But, all this working nothing upon their hardened and obdurate hearts, God commanded him a to collect together, and write in a roll, all the words of prophecy which had been fpoken by him against Israel, Judah, and the nations, from the 13th year of Josiah (when he was first called to the prophetic office) to that time; whereon Jeremiah called to him Baruch, the fon of Neriah, a chief disciple of his, who, being a ready scribe, wrote from his mouth all as God had commanded, and then went with the roll, which he had thus written, up into the temple, and there read it, in the hearing of all the people, on the great fast of the expiation, when all Judah and Jerusalem were affembled together at that folemnity; for Jeremiah, being then shut up in prison for his former prophefying, could not go up thither himfelf, and therefore, by God's command, Baruch was fent to do it in his stead; and at his first reading of the roll, whether it were that Jehoiakim and his princes were then absent to take care of the borders of the kingdom, which Nebuchadnezzar was then just ready to invade, or that, amidst the distractions which ufually happen on fuch impending dangers, men's minds were otherwise engaged, no resentments were at that time expressed either against the prophet or his disciple on this occasion. Baruch being very much affrighted and difmayed at the threats of the roll, which he had thus wrote and publicly read, the word of prophecy, which we have in the 45th chapter of Jeremiah, was feut from God on purpose to comfort him, and a promife is therein given him, that amidst all the calamities, destructions, and desolations, which, according to the words of the roll, should be certainly brought upon Judah and Jerusalem, he should be fure to find a deliverance; for that none of them should reach him, but God would give him his life for a prey, in all places wherefoever he should go.

The great fast of the expiation, wherein Baruch read the roll, as is above related, was annually kept by the Jews b on the tenth day of the month Tizri, which answers to our September. Immediately after that Nebuchadnezzar invaded Judea; and, having laid siege to Jerusalem, c made himself master of it in the ninth month, called Cisleu, which answers to our November, on the 18th day of that month, (for on that day is still kept by the Jews an annual fast in commemoration of it even to this day),

Dan. i. 2. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6.

and,

^a Jeremiah xxxvi. b Leviticus xvi. 29. and xxiii. 27.

and, having then taken Jehoiakim prisoner, he put him in chains, to carry him to Babylon. But he having a humbled himfelf to Nebuchadnezzar, and fubmitted to become his tributary, and thereon fworn fealty to him, he was again restored to his kingdom; and Nebuchadnezzar marched from Jerusalem for the farther profecuting of his victories against the Egyptians.

But, before he removed from Jerusalem, he had caused great numbers of the people to be fent captive to Babylon, and particularly b gave order to Ashpenaz, the master of his eunuchs, that he should make choice out of the children of the royal family, and of the nobility of the land, fuch as he found to be of the fairest countenance, and the quickest parts, to be carried to Babylon, and there made eunuchs in his palace; whereby was fulfilled the word of the Lord spoken by c If iah the prophet to Hezekiah, king of Judah, above an hundred years before. At the same time also, he d carried away a great part of the veffels of the house of the Lord to put them in the house of Bel, his god, at Babylon. And therefore, the people being thus carried into captivity, the fons of the royal family, and of the nobility of the land made eunuchs and flaves in the palace of the king of Babylon, the veffels of the temple carried this ther, and the king made a tributary, and the whole land now brought into vassalage under the Babylonians, from hence must be reckoned the beginning of the feventy years of the Babylonish captivity, e foretold by the prophet Jeremiah; and the fourth year of Jehoiakim must be the first year in that computation.

Among the number of the children, that were carried away in this captivity by the master of the eunuchs, were f Daniel. Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. Daniel they called Belteshazzar, and the other three, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abedrego. Some, indeed, do place their captivity some years latter, but that is absolutely inconfistent with what is elsewhere said in scripture. For these children, after their carrying away to Babylon, were to be g three years under the tuition of the master of the eunuchs, to be instructed by him in the language and the learning of the Chaldeans, before they were to be admitted to the presence of the king, to stand and serve before him. But in the fecond hyear of Nebuchadnezzar's reign at Babylon, from his father's death (which was but the 4th year after his first taking of Jerusalem), Daniel had not only admission and freedom of ac-Vor. I.

cefe

E

² Kings xxiv. 1.

b Diniel i. 3.

⁶ If. xxxix. 7. 2 Kings xx. 13.

d Daniel i, 2,

e Jer. xxv. 11. & xxix. 10.

f Daniel i. 6.

g Daniel i. 5.

h Daniel ii. 16,

eefs to the presence of the king, but we find him a there interpreting of his dream, and immediately thereon advanced to be chief b of the governors of the wife men, and ruler over all the province of Babylon: for which trust less than four years instruction in the language, laws, usages, and learning of the country can scarce be thought sufficient to qualify him, nor could he any fooner be old enough for it; for he was but a youth when he was first carried away from Jerusalem. And therefore all this put together doth necessarily determine the time of Daniel's and the other children's carrying away to Babylon to the year where I have placed it; and, if we will make fcripture confistent with scripture, it could not possibly have been any later. Daniel, speaking of the captivity, c begins the history of it from the 3d year of Jehoiakim, which placeth it back flill a year farther than I have done: and this is an objection on the other hand; but the answer hereto is easy. Daniel begins his computation from the time that Nebuchadnezzar was fent from Babylon by his father on this expedition, which was in the latter end of the 3d year of Jehoiakim: after that, two months at least must have been spent in his march to the borders of Syria. There, in the 4th year of Jehoiakim (we suppose in the beginning of that year) he fought the Egyptians; and, having overthrown them in battle, belieged Carchemish, and took it: after this, he reduced all the provinces and cities of Syria and Phonicia, in which having employed the greatest part of the year (and a great deal of work it was to do within that time), in the beginning of October, he came and laid fiege to Jerufalem, and, about a month after, took the city: and from hence we date the beginning of Daniel's fervitude, and also the beginning of the fever ty years of the Babylonish captivity; and therefore do reckon that year to have been the first of both.

The Scythians, who had now for 28 years held all the Upper Afia (that is, the two Armenia's, Cappadocia, Pontus, Golchis, and Iberia), were this year again driven out of it. The Medes, whem they had difposiessed or these provinces, had long endeavoured to recover them by open force; but finding themselves unable to succeed this way, they at length accomplished it by treachery: for, under the covert of a peace (which they had made on purpose to carry on the fraud), they invited the greatest part of them to a seast, where, having made them drunk, they slew them all; after which, having easily subdued the rest, they recovered from them all that they had lost, and again extended their empire to the river Halys, which had been the ancient borders of it towards the west.

After

a Dan. ii. 31. b Dan. ii. 48. C Dan. i. 1. d Herodet. lib. 1.

After the Chaldeans were gone from Jerufalem, Jehoiakim, instead of being amended by those heavy chastisements which by their hand God had inflicted on Jehoiak. 5. him and his kingdom, rather grew worfe under them in all those ways of wickedness and impiety which he had afore practifed; and Judah and Jerusalem kept pace with him herein, to the farther provoking of God's wrath, and the hastening of their own destruction. However, no means were omitted to reclaim them; and Jeremiah the prophet, who was particularly fent to them for this purpole, was conflantly calling upon them, and exhorting them to turn unto the Lord their God, that fo his wrath might be turned from them, and they faved from the destruction which was coming upon them, of which he ceased not continually to warn them. And they having, on the ninth month, called Ciflen, proclaimed a public fast to be held on the 18th day of the same, because of the calamity which they had fuffered thereon, in the taking of Jerufalem by the Chaldeans the year foregoing (which hath ever fince been annually observed by them in commemoration hereof, as hath been afore faid), the prophet, laying hold of this opportunity, when all Judah and Jerusalem were met together to keep this folemnity, a fent Baruch again up into the temple with the roll of his prophecies, there to read it a fecond time in the hearing of all of them, making thereby another trial, if, by the terrors of these prophecies, it were possible to fright them into their duty. And it being God's command, by the mouth of his prophet, Baruch accordingly went up into the temple on the faid fast-day, and, entering into the chamber of Gemariah the fcribe (which was the room where the king's council used to fit in the temple, near the east gate of the same), did there, from a window aloft, read, in the hearing of all the people, then gathered together in the court below, all the words of the faid roll: which Micaiah, the fon of Gemariah, who was then prefent, hearing, went immediately to the king's house, and there informed the lords of the council of it; whereon they fent for Baruch, and caused him to fit down, and read the roll over to them; at the hearing whereof, and the threats therein contained, they, being much affrighted, inquired of Baruch the manner of his writing of it; and being informed that it was all dictated to him from the mouth of the prophet, they ordered him to leave the roll and depart, adviling, that he and Jeremiah should immediately go and hide themselves, where no one might find them; and then went in to the king, and in-E 2 formed formed him of all that had passed; whereon he sent for the roll, and caused it to be read to him; but after he had heard three or four leaves of it, as he was sitting by the fire in the winter parlour, he took it and cut it with a pen-knife, and cast it into the fire that was there before him, till it was all confumed, not-withstanding some of the lords of the council intreated him to the contrary; and immediately thereon, issued out an order to have Baruch and Jeremiah seized; but having hid themselves, as advised by the council, they could not be found.

^{*} Jeremich xxxvi, 9, 10, &c.

The Jews keep an annual fast even to this day for the burning of this roll: the day marked for it in their kalendar is the 29th day of 2 Cisson, eleven days after that, which they keep for that fast, on which it was read in the temple. But, the reading of the roll on the fast of the 18th of Cisson, and the burning of it according to the account given hereof by Jeremiah, feem immediately to have followed each other.

After the burning of this roll, another by God's especial command was forthwith written in the same manner, from the mouth of the prophet, by the hand of Baruch, wherein was contained all that was in the former roll; and there were added many other like words, and particularly that prophecy in respect of Jehoiakim and his house, which is, for this impicus fact, in the 30th and 31st verses of the 36th chapter of Jeremiah, denounced against them.

In making the roll to be read twice in the temple by Baruch, I confess, I differ from most that have commented upon this place of scripture. But as the reading of the roll by Baruch is, in the 36th chapter of Jeremiah, twice related, so it is plain to me, that it was twice done: for in the first relation, b it is said to be done in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, and, in the second, it is said to be done in the 5th; which plainly denotes two different times. And, in the first relation, Jeremiah d is said to be shut up in prison, when the roll was read; but, in the second relation, it plainly appears, he was out of prison, for e he was then at sull liberty to go out of the way and hide himself. For these reasons I take it for certain, that the roll was twice read: and I have Archbishop Usher with me in the same opinion, whose judgement must always be of the greatest weight in such matters.

Nebuchadnezzar, after his departure from Jerusalem, employed all this year in carrying on his war against the Egyptians, in which he had that success, that before the ensuing winter, he had driven driven them out of all Syria and Palestine, and brought in Subjection to him, a from the river Euphrates to the river of Egypt, all that formerly belonged to the king of Egypt, i. e. all Syria and Palestine. For, as the river Euphrates was the boundary of Syria towards the north-east; so the river of Egypt was the boundary of Palestine towards the fouth-west. This river of Egypt, which is so often mentioned in scripture as the boundary of the land of Canaan, or Palestine, towards Egypt, was not the Nile, as many suppose, but a small river, which, running through the defart that lies between thefe two countries, was anciently reckoned the common boundary of both. And thus far the land reached, which was promifed to the feed of Abraham (Gen. xv. 18.), and was afterwards by lot divided among them, Joshua xv. 4.

^a Ciflen is the 9th month in the Jewish year, and answers to our November.

^b Jer. xxxvi. 1. ^c Jer xxxvi. 9. ^d Jer. xxxvi. 5. ^e Jer. xxxvi. 26.

Towards the end of the 5th year of Jehoiakim, died Nabopollafar, king of Babylon, and father of Nebuchadnezzar, after he had reigned b one and twenty years, which Nebuchadnezzar being informed of, c he immediately, with a few only of his followers, haftened through the defart the nearest way to Babylon, leaving the grofs of his army, with the prifoners and prey, to be brought after him by his generals. On his arrival at the palace, he received the government from the hands of these who had carefully reserved it for him, and thereon fucceeded his father in the whole empire, which contained Chaldea, Affyria, Arabia, Syria, and Palestine, and reigned over it, according to Ptolemy, forty-three years; the first of which begins from the January following, which is the Babylonish account, from which the Jewish account differs two years, as reckoning his reign from the time he was admitted to be partner with his father. From hence we have a double computation of the years of his reign, the Jewish and the Babylonith; Daniel follows the latter, but all other parts of scripture that make mention of him, the other.

Jehoiak.o.

In the feventh year of Jehoiakim, which was the fecond year of Nebuchadnezzar, according to the Babylonish account, and the fourth according to the Jewish, Da- An. 603.
Jehoiak 7. niel d revealed unto Nebuchadnezzar his dream, and also unfolded to him the interpretation of it, in the manner as we have it at large related in the 2d chapter of Daniel; whereon he was advanced to great honour, being made chief of the governors over all the wife men of Babylon, and also chief ruler

 E_3

² Kings xxiv. 7. b Canon Ptolemæi.

Berofus apud Joseph. Antiq. lib- 10. c. 11. et contra Apionem, lib. 1.

Daniel ii.

over the whole province of Babylon, and one of the chief lords of the council, who always continued in the king's court, he being then about the age of twenty-two. And, in his profperity, he was not forgetful of his three companions, who had been brought to Babylon with him, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego; but, having spoken to the king in their behalf, procured, that they were preferred to places of great honour under him in the province of Babylon. These afterwards made themselves very signally known to the king, and also to the whole empire of Babylon, by their constancy to their religion, in resusing to worship the golden image which Nebuchaduezzar had set up, and by the wonderful deliverance which God wrought for them thereon; which deservedly recommending them to the king's highest regard, they were thereon much higher advanced: the whole history—hereof is at full related in the 3d chapter of Daniel.

The same year, Jehoiakim, after he had served the king of Babylon three years, a rebelled against him, and, refusing to pay him any more tribute, renewed his confederacy with Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, in opposition to him. Whereon Nebuchadezzar, not being then at leifure, by reason of other engagements, to come himself and chastite him, sent orders to all his lieutenants and governors of provinces in those parts to make war upon him; which brought upon Jehoiakim inroads and invasions from every quarter, b the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Syrians, the Arabians, and all the other nations round him, who had subjected themselves to the Babylonish yoke, infessing him with incursions, and harassing him with depredations on every side: and thus they continued to do for three years together, till at length, in the 11th year of his reign, An. 599. all parties joined together against him; e they shut him up in jerusalem, where, in the profecution of the siege, having taken him prisoner in some fally (it may be supposed) which he made upon them, they slew him with the sword, and then cast out his dead body into the high-way, without one of the gates of Jerusalem, allowing it no other burial, as the prophet Jeremiah had soretold, than that of an ass, that is, to be cast forth into a place of the greatest contempt, there to rot and be consumed to dust in the open air.

The year before, e died his confederate, on whom he chiefly depended, Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, after he had reigned 16 years, and Pfammis his fon fucceeded him in the kingdom.

Jehoiakim

a 2 Kingo xviv. r.

b 2 Kings xxiv. 2.

^{6 2} Kings xxiv. 10.
d Jeremiah xxii. 18. 19. & xxxvi. 30.

Alcrodot. lib. 2.

Jehoiakim being dead, 2 Jehoiachin his fon (who is also called Jeconiah, and Coniah reigned in his stead, who doing evil in the fight of the Lord, in the same manner as his Father had done; this provoked b a very bitter declaration of God's wrath against him, by the mouth of the prophet Jeremiah, and it was as bitterly executed upon him. For after Jehoiakim's death, the servants of Nebuchadnezzar (that is, his lieutenants and governors of the provinces, that were under his subjection in those parts) still c continued to block up Jerusalem; and, after three months, Nebuchadnezzer himfelf came thither in person with his royal army, and caused the place to be begirt with a close siege on every fide; whereon Jehoiachin, finding himfelf unable to defend it, went out to Nebuchadnezzar with his mother, and his princes and fervants, and delivered himself into his hands. hereby, he obtained no other favour than to fave his life, for, being immediately put in chains, he was carried to Babylon, and there continued shut up in prison till the death of Nebuchadnezzar, which was full feven and thirty years.

Teborachin. Zedckiahı.

Nebuchadnezzar, having hereon made himself master of Jerufalem, d took thence all the treasures of the house of the Lord. and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces the veffels of gold, which Solomon, king of Ifrael, had made in the temple of the Lord, and carried them to Babylon; and he also carried thither with him a vast number of captives, Jehoiachin the king, his mother, and his wives, and his officers, and princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even to the number of ten thousand men, out of Jerusalem only, besides the smiths, and the carpenters, and other artificers; and, out of the rest of the land, of the mighty men feven thouland, and of the crafts-men and finiths one thousand, besides three thousand twenty and three, e which had been carried away the year before out of the open country, before the fiege of Jerufalem was begun. With the mighty men of valour he recruited his army, and the artificers he employed in the carrying on of his building at Babylon; of which we shall speak hereafter.

In this captivity f was carried away to Babylon Ezekiel the prophet, the fon of Buzi, of the house of Aaron, and therefore the æra whereby he reckons throughout all his prophecies is from this captivity.

E 4 After

² 2 Kings xxiv. 6. 2 Chron. xxxvi.9.

b Jer. xxii. 24.— 30. 2 Kings xxiv. 10. 11.

d 2 Kings xxiv. 13 .- 16. e fer. lii. 28.

f Ezek. kl. 1.

After this great carrying away of the Jews into a captivity, the poorer fort of the people being still left in the land, Nebuchadnezzar made Mattaniah, the son of Josiah, and uncle of Jehoiachin, king over them, taking of him a solemn oath to be true and faithful unto him; and, to engage him the more to be so, he changed his name from Mattaniah to Zedekiah, which signifieth the justice of the Lord, intending by this name to put him continually in mind of the vengeance which he was to expect from the justice of the Lord his God, if he violated that sidelity, which he had in his name fworn unto him.

Zedekiah, being thus made king, reigned eleven years in Jexusalem; but his ways being evil in the fight of the Lord, as were those of his nephew and brothers that reigned before him, he did thereby so far fill up the measure of the iniquities of his foresathers, that they at length drew down upon Judah and Jexusalem that terrible destruction in which his reign ended.

And thus was concluded the fecond war which Nebuchadnezzar had with the Jews. Three years he managed it by his lieutenants and governors of the neighbouring provinces of his empire. In the fourth year he came himself in person, and put an end to it in the captivity of Jehoiachin, and the taking of Jerusalem. What hindered him from coming sooner is not said; only it appears, that, in the tenth year of Jehoiakim, he was engaged in an arbitration between the Medes and Lydians. The occasion was this. After b the Medes had recovered all the upper Asia out of the hand of the Scythians, and again extended their borders to the river Halys, which was the common boundary between them and the Lydians, it was not long before there happened a war between these two nations, which was managed for five years together with various success. In the fixth year they engaged each other with the utmost of their strength, intending to make that battle decifive of the quarrel, that was between them. But, in the midst of it, while the fortune of the day feemed to hang in an equal balance between them, there happened an eclipfe, which overfpread both armies with darknefs; whereon, being frightened with what had happened, they both defifted from fighting any longer; and agreed to refer the controversy to the arbitration of two neighbouring princes. The Lydians chofe Siennesis, king of Cilicia, and the Medes, c Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who agreed a peace between them on the terms, that Aftyages, fon to Cyaxares, king of Media, should take to wife Arienna, the daughter of Halvattis, king of b Herodotts, lib. 2.

² Kings xxiv. 17. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10.

He is, by Herodotus, lib. 1. called Labynetus.

the Lydians; of which marriage, within a year after, was born Cyaxares, who is called Darius the Median in the book of Daniel. This eclipfe was foretold by Thales the Milefian; and it happened on the 20th of September, according to the Julian account, in the 147th year of Nabonassar, and in the ninth of the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, which was the year before Chrift 601.

The same year that Cyaxares was born to Astyages, he gave his daughter Mandana, whom he had by a former wife, in marriage to Cymbyses, king of Persia; of whom the next year after (which was the last year of Jehoiakim) was born Cyrus, the famous founder of the Persian monarchy, and the restorer of the Jews to their country, their temple, and their former state.

Jehoiachin being thus carried into captivity, and Zedekiah fettled in the throe, Jeremiah had, in a vision, under the type of two baskets of figs, foreshewn unto him the restoration which God would again give to them who were carried into captivity, and the misery and desolation which should befalthem, with their king, that were still in the land; that the captivity of the for ner should become a means of preservation unto them, while the liberty which the others were left in should serve only to lead them to their utter ruin; as accordingly it besel them in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the utter devastation of the land, which happened a few years afterwards.

The same year God also foreshewed to Jeremiah the confusion which he would bring upon b Elam (a kingdom lying upon the river Ulai, eastward beyond the Tigris), and the restoration which he would afterwards give thereto; which accordingly came to pass: for it was c conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, and subjected to him, in the same manner as Judah was. But afterwards, joining with Cyrus, it helped to conquer and subdue the Babylonians, who had before conquered them; and d Shushan, which was the chief city of that province, was thenceforth made the metropolis of the Persian empire, and had the throne of the kingdom placed in it.

After the departure of Nebuchadnezzar out of Judea and Syria, Zedekiah having fettled himfelf in the kingdom, e the kings of the Ammonites, and of the Moabites, and of the Edomites, and of the Zidonians, and the Tyrians, and of the other neighbouring nations, fent their ambassadors to Jerusalem, to congratulate Zedekiah on his accession to the throne, and then proposed to him a league against the king of Babylon, for the

haking

^a Jeremiah xxiv.

b Jeremiah xlix. 34.—39. × Xen. Cyropæd, lib. 6.

d Strabo, lib. 15. p. 727. d Jeremiah xxvii.

shaking off his yoke, and the hindering of him from any more returning into those parts. Whereon Jeremiah, by the command of God, made him yokes and bonds, and fent them by the faid an baffadors to their respective masters, with this message from God, That God had given all their countries unto the king of Babylon, and that they should serve him, and his son, and his fon's fon, and that, if they would fubmit to his yoke, and become obedient to him, it should be well with them, and their land, but, if otherwise, they should be consumed and destroyed before him. And he spake also to King Zedekiah according to the same words; which had that influence on him, that he did not then enter into the league that was proposed to him by the ambailadors of those princes. But afterwards, when it was farther strengthened, by the joining of the Egyptians and other nations in it, and he and his people began to be tired with the heavy burden and oppression of the Babylonish domination over them, he also was drawn into this confederacy; which ended in the absolute ruin both of him and his kingdom, as will be hereafter related.

Zedekiah, about the second year of his reign, a sent Elasah the fon of Shaphan, and Gemarian the fon of Hilkiah, to Babylon, on an embaffy to King Nebuchad-Zedel.. 2. By them Jeremiah wrote a letter to the Tews of the captivity in Babylon. The occasion of which was, Ahab the fon of Kilaiah, and Zedekiah the fon of Maaseiah, two of the captivity among the Jews at Babylon, taking upon them to be prophets feet to them from God, fed them with lying prophecies, and falle promites of a speedy restoration, whereon they neglected to make any fettlements in the places affigned them for their habitation, either by building of houses, cultivating their land, marrying of wives, or doing any thing elfe for their own interest and welfare in the country where they were carried, out of a vain expectation of a speedy return. To remedy this evil, feremiah wrote to them to let them know, that they were deceived by those who made them entertain such false hopes: that, by the appointment of God, their captivity at Babylon was to left feventy years; and those who remained in Judah and Jerulalem should be so far from being able to affect any restoration for them, that God would speedily fend against them the Iword, the famine, and the pestilence, for the consuming of the greatest part of them, and scatter the rest over the face of the earth, to be a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among the nations, whither he would drive them. And therefore he exhorts them to provide for themselves in the country country whether they are carried, as fettled inhabitants of the fame, and comport themselves there, according to all the duties which belong to them as fuch, without expecting any return till the time that God had appointed. And as to their false prophets, who had prophefied a lie unto them, he denounced God's curse against them in a speedy and fearful destruction; which accordingly was foon after executed upon them: for Nebuchadnezzar finding that they disturbed the people by their vain prophecies, and hindered them from making fettlements for themfelves in the places where he had planted them, caused them to be feized, and roafted to death in the fire. The a latter Jews fay, that these two men were the two elders who would have corrupted Sufannah, and that Nebuchadnezzar commanded them to be burnt for this reason. The whole foundation of this conceit is, that Jeremiah, in the 23d verse of the chapter where he writes hereof, accuseth them for committing adultery with their neighbours wives; from whence they conjecture all the rest.

These letters being read to the people of the captivity at Babylon, such as were loath to be dispossed of their vain hopes, were much offended at them; and therefore Semaiah, the Nehelemite, another false pretender to prophecy among them, writing their as well as his own sentiments hereof, sent back letters by the same ambassadors, directing them to Zephaniah, the son of Maaseiah, the second priest, and to all the priests, and people at Jerusalem, wherein he complained of Jeremiah for writing the said letters, and required them to rebuke him for the same; which letters being read to Jeremiah, the word of God came unto him, which denounced a very severe punishment upon Semaiah for the fame.

In the fourth year of Zedekiah, and the fifth month of that year, Hananiah, the fon of Azur of Gibeon, b took upon him to prophefy falfely in the name of the Lord, that within two full years God would bring back all the vessels of the house of the Lord, and King Jeconiah, and all the captives again to Jerusalem; whereon, the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah concerning Hananiah, that seeing he had spoken to the people of Judah in the name of the Lord, who sent him not, and had made them thereby to trust in a lie, he should be switten of God, and die before the year. should expire; and accordingly, he died the same year, in the

The fame year, Jeremiah had revealed unto him the prophecies, which we have in the 50th and 51st chapters of Jeremiah, concerning God's judgements that were to be executed upon Chaldes feventh month, which was within two months after.

Chaldea and Babylon, by the Medes and Persians. All which Jeremiah wrote in a book, and a delivered it to Seraiah, the son of Neriah, and brother of Baruch, who was then sent to Babylon by Zedekiah, commanding him, that, when he should come to Babylon, he should there read the same upon the banks of Euphrates; and that, when he should have there made an end of reading it, he should bind a stone to it, and east it into the midst of the river, to denote thereby, that, as that should sink, so should Babylon also sink, and never rise any more; which hath since been fully verified, about two thousand years having now passed since Babylon hath been wholly desolated, and without an inhabitant.

Baruch feemeth to have gone with his brother in this journey to Babylon; for he is b faid, in the apocryphal book that bears his name, to have read that book at Babylon, in the hearing of King Jeconiah, or Jehoiachin, and of the elders and people of the Jews then at Babylon, on the fifth year after the taking of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans; which can be understood of no other taking of it, than that wherein Jehoiachin was made a captive: for, after the last taking of it, in the eleventh of Zedekiah, Baruch could not be in Babylon; for, after that, he went into Egypt with Jeremiah, from whence it is not likely that he did ever return. And farther, it is faid, in this very book of Baruch, that, after the reading of his book, as aforefaid, a collection was made at Babylon of money, which was fent to Jerusalem, to Joakim, the high priest, the son of Hilkiah, the son of Shallum, and to the priests, and to all the people that were found with him at Jerusalem, to buy burnt-offerings, and sinofferings, and incense, and to prepare the mincha, and to offer upon the altar of the Lord their God; nothing of which could be true after the last taking of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans: for then the city and temple were burnt and utterly destroyed; and after that there was no high priest, altar, altar-fervice, or people, to be found at Jerusalem, till the return of the Jews again thither, after the end of their 70 years captivity. And, if there were any fuch person as Joakim (for he is no where else named), fince he is here said to be the son of Hilkiah, the son of Shallum, he must have been the uncle of Seraiah, who was high priest at the burning of the temple, and grandfon to the fame Hilkiah; and therefore he must have been high priest before Seraiah, if there were any fuch person in that office at all: for it is certain, there were none such in it after him, during the life of Jeconiah. But of what authority this book is, or by whom it was written, whether any thing related therein be historically true, or the whole

² Jer. II. 59---64.

whole of it a fiction, is altogether uncertain. Grotius a thinks it wholly feigned, by fome hellenistical Jew, under Baruch's name, and fo do many others; and it cannot be denied, but that they have strong reasons on their side. The subject of the book is an epiftle fent, or feigned to be fent, by King Jehoiachin, and the Jews in captivity with him at Babylon, to their brethren, the Jews that were still left in Judah and Jerusalem: with an historical preface premised; in which it is related, how Baruch, being then at Babylon, did, in the name of the faid king, and the people by their appointment, draw up the faid epiftle, and afterwards read it to them for their approbation; and how that, the collection being then made, which is above mentioned, the epiffle, with the money, was fent to Jerusalem. There are three copies of it, one in Greek, and the other two in Syriac; whereof one agreeth with the Greek, but the other very much differs from it. But in what language it was originally written, or whether one of these be not the original, or which of them may be so, is what no one can say. Jerome b rejected it wholly, because it is not to be found among the Jews, and calls the epistle annexed to it ψωδόγεαφου, i.e. a false or feigned writing. The most that can be faid for it is, that Cyril of Jerusalem, and the Laodicean council, held A.D. 364, both name Baruch among the canonical books of holy fcripture; for, in both the catalogues which are given us by them of these canonical books, are these words, Jeremias, cum Baruch, Lamentationibus, et Epis. tola, i.e. " Jeremiah, with Baruch, the Lamentations, and the Epiftle;" whereby may feem to be meant the prophecies of Jeremiah, the lamentations of Jeremiah, the book of Baruch, with the epiftle of Jeremiah at the end of it, as they are all laid together in the vulgar Latin edition of the Bible. The answer given hereto is, that these words were intended by them to express no more than Jeremiah's prophecies and lamentations only; that by the epiftle is meant none other than the epiftle in the 20th chapter of Jeremiah; and that Baruch's name is added, only because of the part which he bore in collecting all these together. and adding the last chapter to the book of his prophecies; which is supposed to be Baruch's, because the prophecies of Jeremials end with the chapter before, that is, the 51st, as it is positively faid in the last words of it; and it must be faid, that since neither in St Cyril, nor in the Laodicean council, any of the other apocryphal books are named, it is very unlikely, that, by the name of Baruch in either of them, should be meant the apocryphal book, fo named; which hath the least pretence of any of them to be canonical, a In Comment, ad Baruch.

h In Presiatione ad Jeremiana canonical, as it appeared by the difficulty which a the Trentine fathers found to make it so.

In the 5th year of Zedekiah, which was also the 5th year of Jehoiachin's captivity, and the 30th from the great reformation made in the 18th year of King Josiah, Ezekiel b was called of God to be a prophet among the Jews of the captivity. And this same year he saw the vision of the four cherubims, and the four wheels, which is related in the 1st chapter of his prophecies. The same year were also revealed unto him the 390 years of God's utmost forbearance of the house of Israel, and the 40 years of God's utmost forbearance of the house of Judah, and the judgement which, after that, God would instict upon both; as the whole is contained in the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th chapters of his prophecies.

In the same year died Cyaxares, king of Media, after he had reigned 40 years; and Astyages his son, who in scripture is called Ahafuerus, reigned in his flead.

In the same year e died also Psammis, king of Egypt, in an expedition which he made against the Ethiopians; and Apries his son, the same who in scripture is called Pharaoh Hophra, fucceeded him in that kingdom, and reigned 25 years.

In the same year Ezekiel, being in a vision, was carried to Jerusalem, and there shewn all the several forts of idolatry which were practised by the jews in that place, had revealed unto him the punishments which God would insict upon them for those abominations; and this makes up the subject of the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th chapters of his prophecies. But, at the same time, God promised to those f of the captivity, who, avoiding these abominations, kept themselves sheady and faithful to his service, that he would become a fanctuary unto them in the strange land where they were carried, and bring them back again unto the land of Israel, and there make them flourish in peace and righteousness, as in former times. All s which the prophet declared to the Jews at Babylon, among whom he dwelt.

In the 7th year of Zedekiah, God did, both by types and words of revelation, foreshew unto Ezekiel the taking of Jerusalem by the Chakleans, Zedekiah's flight from thence by night, the putting out of his eyes, and his imprisonment and death at Babylon; and also the carrying away of the Jews at the same time into captivity, b Ezek.i. 1. 2. 3. &c.

The history of Trent, book 2.

⁶ Ezek. iv. 4. 5. 6. &c.

d Herodot. lib. 1.

e Herodot. lib. 26.

f Ez(k. xi. 15---21,

⁸ Ezck, xi. 25,

the defolation of their country, and the many and great calamities which should befal them for their iniquities: and this is the subject of the 12th chapter of his prophecies. And what is contained in the feven following chapters was also the fame year revealed unto him, and relates mostly to the same subject.

At this time Daniel was grown to fo great a perfection and eminency in all righteoufness, holiness, and piety of life, in the fight both of God and man, that a he is by God himself equalled with Noah and Job, and reckoned with these two to make up the three, who, of all the faints that had till then lived upon the earth, had the greatest power to prevail with God in their prayers for others. And yet he was then but a young man; for, allowing him to be eighteen when he was carried away to Babylon, among other children, to be there educated, and brought up for the fervice of the king (and a greater will not agree with this character), thirty-two at this time must have been the utmost of his age. But he dedicated the prime and vigour of his life to the service of God; and that is the best time to make proficiency therein.

Zedekiah, having in the 7th year of his reign b fent ambaffadors into Egypt, made a confederacy with Pharaoh An. 591. Hophra, king of Egypt; and therefore, the next Zedek. 8. year, after breaking the oath of fidelity which he had fworn in the name of the Lord his God unto Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, he rebelled against him; which drew on him that war which ended in his ruin, and in the ruin of all Judah and Jerusalem with him, in that calamitous destruction in which both were involved hereby.

In the 9th year of Zedekiah, c Nebuchadnezzar, having drawn together a great army out of all the nations under his dominion, marched against him, to punish Zedrk.g. him for his perfidy and rebellio. But, on his coming into Syria, finding that the Ammonites had also entered into the same confederacy with Egypt against him, he was d in a doubt for some time which of these two people he should first fall upon, them, or the Jews; whereon he committed the decifion of the matter to his diviners, who, confulting by the entrails of their facrifices, their terephim, and their arrows, determined for the carrying of the war against the Jews. This way of divining by arrows was usual among these idolaters. The manner of it, Jerome e tells us, was thus: They wrote on fevera'

a Ezek xiv. 14. 20. b Ezek. xvii. 15.

c 2 Kings xxv. 1. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17. Jer. xxxix. 1. lii. 4. Ezek. xxi. 19--24. In Comment. in E7ck. xxi.

Lzek. xxi. 19---24.

ral arrows the names of the cities they intended to make war against, and then, putting them promiseuously all together into a quiver, they caused them to be drawn out thence in the manner as they draw lots; and that city, whose name was on the arrow first drawn, was the first they assaulted. And by this way of divination, the war being determined against Judah, Nebuchadnezzar immediately marched his army into that country, and in a few days a took all the cities thereof, excepting only Lachish, Azekah, and Jerusalem: Whereon, the Jews at Jerufalem, being terrified with these losses, and the apprehensions of a fiege, then ready to be laid to that place, made a shew ofreturning unto the Lord their God, and entered into a folemn covenant, thenceforth to ferve him only, and faithfully observe all his laws. And, in pursuance hereof, b proclamation was made, that every man should let his man-fervant, and every man his maid-fervant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewefs, go free c, according to the law of God; and every man did according hereto.

On the d tenth month of the same year, and the tenth day of the month (which was about the end of our December, Nebuchadnezzar, with all his numerous army, laid siege to Jerusalem, and blocked it close up on every side; in memory whereof, the tenth day of Tebeth, which is their tenth month, hath ever since been observed by the Jews, as a day of solemn fast even to this time.

On the same ftenth day of the tenth month, in which this siege began at Jerusalem, was the same revealed to Ezekiel in Chaldea; where, by the type of a boiling pot, was foreshewn unto him the dismal destruction which should thereby be brought upon that city. And the same night, the wife of the prophet, who was the desire of his eyes, was, by a sudden stroke of death, taken from him; and he was forbid by God to make any manner of mourning for her, or appear with any of the usual signs of it upon him, thereby to forethew, that the holy city, the temple, and the sanctuary, which were dearer to them than any wife can be in the eyes of her husband, should not only, by a speedy and sudden stroke of destruction, be taken from them, but that the calamity ensuing thereon should be such, and so great, as should not allow them as much as to mourn for the loss of them.

In the beginning of the tenth year of Zedekiah, h the pro-

a Jer. xxxiv. 7.

b Jer. xxxiv. 8-10.

Deut. xv. 12.
d o Kingsxxv. 1. Jer. xxxiv. 1. lii. 4.

^e Zech. viii. 19.

f Ezek. xxiv. 1. 2.

g Ezek. xxiv. 16-18.

h Jer. xxxiv.

phet Jeremiah, being fent of God, declared unto him, that the Babylonians, who were now belieg-

An. 589. Zedekiah 10.

ing of the city, should certainly take it, and burn it with fire, and take him prisoner, and carry him to Babylon; and that he should die there. Whereon a Zedekiah, being much displeased, put him in prison, and, while he was shut up there, even in this very year, b he purchased of Hanameel, his uncle's son, a field in Anathoth; thereby to foreshew, that although judah and Jerusalem should be laid desolate, and the inhabitants led into captivity, yet there should be a restoration, when lands and possessing should be again enjoyed by the legal owners of them, in the same manner as in former times.

Pharaoh Hophra coming out of Egypt with a great army to the relief of Zedekiah, Nebuchadnezzar raifed the fiege of Jerusalem to march against him. But, before he went on this expedition, dhe fent all the captive Jews which he then had in his camp to Babylon, the number of which were 832 persons.

On the departure of the Chaldeans from Jerusalem, Jeremiah being again set at liberty, e Zedekiah sent unto him Jehucal, the son of Shelemiah, and Zephaniah, the son of Maaseiah, the priest, to inquire of the Lord by him, and to desire him to pray for him and his people. To whom the prophet returned an answer from God, that the Egyptians, whom they did depend upon, would certainly deceive them; that their army would again return into Egypt, without giving them any help at all; and that thereon the Chaldeans would again renew the siege, take the city, and burn it with sire.

But the general opinion of the people being, that the Chaldeans were gone for good and all, and would return no more to renew the war against them, they f repented of the covenant of reformation, which they had entered into before God, when they were in fear of them; and caused every man's ferva: t, and every man's handmaid, whom they had set at liberty, again to return into servitude, to be unto them again for servants and for handmaids, contrary to the law of the Lord, and the covenant, which they had lately entered into with him, to wak according to it. For s which inhuman and unjust act, and their impious breach of the covenant lately made with God, Jeremiah proclaimed liberty to the sword, the samine, and the pestilence, to execute the wrath of God upon them, and their king, and their princes, and all Judah and Jerusalem, to their utter deastruction.

Vol. I. F Winls

⁴ Jer xxxii. 1.—3. ^b Jer. xxxii. 7.—17,

d Jer. xxxvii. 5.

f Jer. xxxvii. 3.—10.

⁸ Jer. xxxiv. 17 .-- 27

While the Chaldeans were yet absent from Jerusalem, a Jeremiah intending to retire to Anathoth, his native place, that thereby he might avoid the siege, which he knew would be again renewed on the return of the Chaldeans from their expedition against the Egyptians, put himself on his journey thither; but, as he was passing the gate of the city that led that way, the captain, that kept guard there, seized him for a deserter, as if his intentions were to fall away to the Chaldeans; whereon he was again put in prison, in the house of Jonathan the scribe, which they had made the common jail of the city, where he remained many days

The Egyptians, on the coming of the Chaldeans against them, durst not stay to engage in battle with so numerous and well appointed an army; but, b withdrawing on their approach, retired again into their own country, treacherously leaving Zedekiah and his people to perish in that war which they had drawn them into. Whereon c the prophet Ezekiel, reproaching them for their perfidy, in thus becoming a staff of reed to those, whom by oaths and covenants of alliance they had made to lean and confide on them, denounced God's judgements against them, to be executed both upon king and people, in war, confusion, and desolation, for forty years enfuing, for the punishment hereof: and d also foretold, how, after that, they should fink low, and become a mean and base people, and should no more have a prince of their own to reign over them. Which hath accordingly come to pals: for, not long after the expiration of the faid forty years, they were made a province of the Persian empire, and have been governed by itrangers ever fince; for, on the failure of the Perfian empire, they became subject to the Macedonians, and after them to the Romans, and after the Romans to the Saracens, and then to the Mamalukes, and are now a province of the Turkish empire.

On the retreat of the Egyptians, Nebuchaduezzar e returned to Jerusalem, and again renewed the siege of that place; which lasted about a year, from the second investing of it, to the time when it was taken.

The fiege being thus renewed, Zedekiah f fent for Jeremiah out of prison, to consult with him, and inquire of him, what word there was from God concerning the present state of his affairs? to which he found there was no other answer, but that he was to be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon. However, at the intreaty of the prophet, he was prevailed with a Jer. xxxvii. 11.-15.

b Jer. xxxvii. 7.

C Ezek. xxix.

d Ezck. xxx. rg.

Jer. xxxvii. 8.

f Jer. xxxvii. 17.-21.

not to fend him back again to the common jail of the city, left he should die there by reason of the noisonness of the place; and therefore, instead thereof, he was ordered to the prison of the king's court, where he continued, with the allowance of a certain portion of bread out of the common store, till the city was taken.

Zidekiah, finding himfelf in the fiege much preffed by the Chaldeans, a fent messengers to Jeremiah, farther to inquire of the Lord by him concerning the present war. To which he answered, that the word of the Lord concerning him was, that God, being very much provoked against him, and his people, for their iniquities, would fight against the city, and smite it; that both king and people should be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon; that those who continued in the city, during the fiege, thould perish by the pestilence, the famine, and the fword; but that those who should go out, and fall to the Chaldeans, should have their lives given them for a prev. At which answer b, several of the princes and chief commanders about the king, being very much offended, pressed the king against him, as one that weakened the hands of the men of war, and of all the people, and fought their hurt more than their good: whereon he being delivered into their hands, they cast him into a dungeon, where he must have perished, but that Ebedmelech, an eunuch of the court, having intreated the king in his behalf, delivered him thence; for which charitable act he had a meffage fent him from God of mercy and deliverance unto him. After this, d Zedekiah, fending for Jeremiah into the temple, there fecretly inquired of him; but had no other answer, than what had been afore given him, faving only, that the prophet told him, that, if he would go forthwith and deliver himfelf into the hands of the king of Babylon's princes, who commanded at the carrying on of the fiege, this was the only way whereby he might fave both himself and the city; and he earnestly pressed him hereto. But Zedekiah would not hearken unto bim herein; but feut him back again to prifon, and after that no more confulted with him. In the 11th year of Zedekiah, in the beginning of the year,

God declared, by the prophet Ezekiel, his judgements against Tyre, for their insulting on the calamitous state of Judah and Jerusalem; foreshewing, that the same calamities should be also brought upon them by the same Nebuchadnezzar, into whose hands God would deliver them; and this is the subject of the 26th, 27th, and 28th chapters of his prophecies; in the last of which God particularly F 2 upbraidesis

^{*} Jer. xxi. 1.—14. * Jer. xxxviii, 1.—6,

fer. xxxviii. 7.—13.

d Jer. xxxviii, 14.-23.

upbraideth Ithobal, then king of Tyre, with the infolent and proud conceit he had of his own knowledge and understanding, having pussed up himself herewith, as a " if he were wifer than Daniel; and that there was no secret that could be hid from him:" which sheweth to how great an height the same of Daniel's wisdom was at that time grown, since it now became spoken of, by way of proverb, through all the east; and yet, according to the account above given of his age, he could not at this time exceed 36 years. And, in the conclusion of the 28th chapter, the like judgements are denounced also against Sidon, and for the same reason.

The same year God declared, by the same prophet, his judgements against Pharaoh and the Egyptians: that he would bring the king of Babylon against them, and deliver them into his hands; and that, notwithstanding their greatness and pride, they should no more escape his revenging hand than the Assyrians had done before them, who were higher and greater than they. And this is the subject of the 30th and 31st chapters of his prophecies.

In the 4th month, on the 9th day of the month, of the same 11th year of Zedekiah, b Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans, after the fiege had lasted, from their last setting down before it, about a year. Hereon Zedekiah, with his men of war, fled away; and, having broken through the camp of the enemy, endeavoured to make his escape over Jordan: but, being purfued after, he was overtaken in the plains of Jericho: whereon, all his army being feattered from him, he was taken prisoner, and carried to the king of Babylon at Riblah in Syria, where he then refided; who, having caused his fons, and all his princes that were taken with him, to be flain before his face, commanded his eyes to be put out, and then bound him in fetters of brafs, and fent him to Babylon, where he died in prison: and hereby was fulfilled the c prophecy of the prophet Ezekiel concerning him, That he should be brought to Babylon in the land of the Chaldeans, yet should not see the place, though he should die there.

In the 5th month, on the 7th day of the month (i.e. towards the end of our July), came d Nebuzaradau, captain of the guards, to the king of Eabylon, to Jerufalem; and, after having taken out all the veilels of the house of the Lord, and gathered together all the riches that could be found, either in the king's house, or in any of the other houses of the city, he did, on the

² Ezekiel xxviii. 3.

b 2 Kings xxv. 4. 2 Chr. xxxvi .17. Jer. xxxix. :- 10. ll. 5 -- 11.

e Lzek. xii. 13.

d a Kings xxv. 8 -- 17. J.r. III. 12 -- 23.

10th day of the same month, pursuant to the command of his mafter, fet both the temple and city on fire, and absolutely confumed and destroyed them both, overthrowing all the walls, fortreffes, and towers, belonging thereto, and wholly razing and levelling to the ground every building therein, till he had brought all to a thorough and perfect desolation; and fo it continued for 52 years after, till, by the favour of Cyrus. the Jews being released from their captivity, and restored again to their own land, repaired these ruins, and built again their holy city. In memory of this calamity, they keep two fasts, even to this day, the 17th of the 4th month (which falls in our June) for the destruction of Jerusalem, and the 9th of the 5th month (which falls in our July) for the destruction of the temple; both which are made mention of a in the prophecies of the prophet Zechariah, under the names of the fast of the 4th month, and the fast of the 5th month, and are there spoken of as annually observed from the destruction of Jerusalem to his time, which was 70 years after. Josephus b remarks, that the burning of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar happened on the very fame day of the year on which it was afterwards again burned by Titus.

Nebuzaradan, having thus destroyed the city and the temple of Jerusalem, made all the people he found there captives. Of these c, he took Seraiah the high priest, and Zephaniah the fecond priest, and about 70 others of the principal persons he found in the place, and carried them to Riblah to Nebuchadnezzar, who caused them all there to be put to death. d the rest of the people, he left the poorer fort to till the ground, and drefs their vineyards, and made Gedaliah, the fon of Ahikam, governor over them, and all the other he carried away to Babylon.

But concerning Jeremiah, e Nebuchadnezzar gave particular charge to Nebuzaradan, that he should offer him no hurt, but look well to him, and do for him in all things according as he should defire. And therefore, as soon as he came to Jerusalem, with commission to destroy the place, he and the princes that were with him fent and took him out of prison, where he had lain bound from the time that Zedekiah had put him there, and restored him to his liberty; and, having carried him with him as far as Ramah, on his return to Nebuchadnezzar, he then gave him his option, whether he would go with him to Babylon, Zechariah viii. 19.

b De Bello Judaico, lib. vii. c. 10.

c 2 Kings xxv. 18.--21. Jer. lii. 24.--27.
d 2 Kings xxv. 22--25. Jer. xxxix, 9, 10, & lii. 15. 16.
e Jer. xxxix. 11.--14. & xl. 1.--6.

where he should be well looked after, and maintained at the king's charge, or else remain in the land; and he having chosen the latter, Nebuzaradan gave him victuals and a reward, and sent him back to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, with an especial charge to take care of him.

After Nebuchadnezzar was returned to Babylon, a all those who before, for fear of the Chaldeans, had taken refuge among the neighbouring nations, or had hid themselves in the fields and the deferts, after their escape, on the dispersion of Zedekiah's army in the plains of Jericho, hearing that Gedaliah was made governor of the land, retorted to him; and, he having promised the a protection, and sworn unto them, that they should be safe under his government, they settled themselves again in the land, and gathered in the fruits of it. The chief among these were Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kereah, Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, Azariah the son of Hoshaiah, Ishmael the son of Nethagan, and others.

But b Ishmael came to him only out of a treacherous defign; for, being of the feed royal, he reckoned to make himfelf king of the land, now the Chaldeans were gone; and, for the accomplishing of it, had formed a confpiracy to kill Gedaliah, and feize the government; and Raalis, the king of the Ammonites, was confederated with him herein. But Johanan, the fon of Kereah, having got notice of it, he, and all the chief men of the rest of the people, went to Gedaliah, and informed him of it, proposing to kill Ishmael, and thereby deliver him from the mischief that was intended against him. But Gedaliah being of a very benign difpolition, and not easy to entertain jealousies of any one, would not believe this of Ithmael, but still carried on a friendly correspondence with him; c of which I har ael, taking the advantage, came to him in the feventh month, which answers to our September, when the people were most of them scattered abroad from him to gather in the fruits of the land, and while they were eating and drinking together at an entertainment, which Gedaliah had in a very friendly manner made for him and his men, they rose upon him, and flew him, and, at the fame time, flew also a great number of the Jews and Chaldeans, whom they found with him in M zpah, and took the rest captive. And the next day, hearing of eighty men, who were going on a religious account, with offerings and incense d to the house of God, they craftily drew them die. At Jerufilem; for though the temple were definored, yet the people that were left, continued to offer fierifices and worthip there on the place where it flood, as long as they remained in the land.

^a fer. xl. 7.--12. b Jer. xl. 13.--16. c Jer. xli.

THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT.

them into Mizpah, and there flew them all, excepting ten of them, who offered their stores for the redemption of theil tives. And then taking with them all the captives, among whom were the daughters of King Zedekiah, they departed thence to go over to the Ammonites. But Johanan the fon of Kereah, and the rest of the captains, hearing of this wicked fact, immediately armed as many of the people as they could get together, and purfued after Ishmael; and, having overtaken him at Gibeon, retook all the captives; but he and eight of his men escaped to the Ammonites. This murder of Gedaliah happened two months after the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, in the said feventh month, and on the 30th day of the month. For that day the Jews have kept as a fast in commemoration of this calamity ever fince; and a Zechariah also makes mention of it as observed in his time, calling it by the name of the fast of the feventh month; and they had reason to keep a fast for it, for it was the completion of their ruin.

After this great misfortune, b Johanan the fon of Kereali. and the people that were left, fearing the king of Babylon, because of the murder of Gedaliah whom he had made governor of the land, departed from Mizpah, to flee into the land of Egypt, and came to Bethlehem in their way thither: where they ftopping a while confulted the prophet Jeremiah (whom they had carried with them) about their intended journey, and defired him to inquire of God in their behalf; who, after ten days, having received an answer from God, called them together, and told them, that if they would tarry in the land, all should go well with them, and God would shew mercy unto them, and incline the heart of the king of Babylon to be favourable unto them; but if they would not hearken unto the word of the Lord, but would, not withflanding his word now delivered to the contrary, fet their faces to go into the land of Egypt, that then the fword and famine should follow close after them thither, and they should be all there destroyed. But all this was of no effect with them: for, their hearts being violently bent to go into Egypt, they would not hearken to the word of the Lord spoken to them by the mouth of his prophet, but told Jeremiah, that the answer which he gave them, was not from God, but was fuggefled to him by Baruch the fon of Neriah for their hurt. And therefore Johanan the fon of Kereah, and the rest of the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned, from all nations whither they had been driven, again to dwell in the land, and all the perfons whom Nebuzaradan had left with Gedaliah, even men, women, and children, and the king's daughters, and also Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah, and went into Egypt, and settled in that country, till the plagues and judgements which God had threatened them with, for their disobedience to his word, there overtook them, to their utter destruction. And thus ended this unfortunate year, in which the temple and city of Jernsalem were destroyed, and the whole land of Judah brought in a manner to utter desolution for the sins thereof.

² Zechariah viii. 19. b Jeremiah lii.

THE

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT

CONNECTED,

IN

THE HISTORY

OF

THE JEWS AND NEIGHBOURING NATIONS,

FROM

The Declension of the Kingdoms of Israel and Judau, to the Time of Christ.

BOOK II.

IN the 12th year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, one escaping from Jerusalem a came to Ezekiel in the land of the Chaldeans, and told him of the destruction of the city; whereon he prophesied desolation to the rest of the land of Judah, and utter destruction to the remainder of the Jews who were left therein.

The same year Ezekiel prophesied against Egypt, and Pharaoh Hophra, the king thereof, that God would bring against him Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who should lay the land desolate; and that he and all his armies should be brought to destruction, and perish, like as other nations whom God had cut off for their iniquities: which is the subject of the 32d chapter of his prophecies.

The Jews which went into Egypt, b having fettled at Migdol, and Tahpanhes, and Noph, and in the country of Pathros,

(i. e. at a Magdalum by the Red fea, at Daphne near Pelufium, at Memphis, and in the country of Thebais), gave themselves there wholly up to idelatry, b worshipping the queen of heaven, and other false deities of the land, and burning incense unto them, without having any more regard to the Lord their God. Whereon the c prophet Jeremiah cried aloud against this im- . picty, unto those among whom he lived, that is, those who had fettled d in the land of Pathros or Thebais. (For this being the farthest from Judea of all the places where they had obtained fettlements in that country, they had carried him thither, the better to take from him all opportunity of again returning from them). But all his exhortations were of no other effect. than to draw from them a declaration, that e they would worship the Lord no more, but would go on in their idolatry: for they fold him, that it had been best with them, when they practifed it in Judah and Jerusalem; that it was since their leaving of it off, that all their calamities had happened unto them; and that therefore, they would no more hearken unto any thing, that he should deliver unto them in the name of the Lord. Whereon f the word of the Lord came unto the prophet, denouncing utter destruction unto them by the fword, and by the famine, that thereby all of them, that is, all the men of Judah then dwelling in Egypt, should be confumed, excepting only fome few, who should make their escape into the land of Judah. And, for a figu hereof, it was foretold unto them by the same prophet, that Pharaoh Hophra, king of Egypt, in whom they truffed, should be given into the hands of his enemies, who fought his life, in the fame manner as Zedekiah was given into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, that fought his life; that fo, when this should be brought to pass in their eyes, they might be affored thereby, that all these words, which the Lord hath spoken against them, should certainly be fulfilled upon them; as accordingly they were, about 18 years afterwards.

After this there is no more mention of Jeremiah. It is most likely that he died in Egypt soon after, he being then much advanced in years: (For he had now prophesied 41 years from the 13th of Josiah), and also much broken (as we may well suppose) by the calamities which happened to himself and his country. Tertullian, Epiphanius, Dorotheus, Jerome, and Zonaras, tell us, that he was stoned to death by the Jews, for preaching against ² Vide Boch. Phal. p. 1. lib. 4. c. 27. ³ Jer. xliv. 8. 15.---19.

Jer xliv. 1-15.

d Jer. xliv. 15.
c Jer. xliv. 16---19.

f Jer. xliv. 26-30.

against their idolatry. And of this some interpret St Paul's ล้มเห็นอยิทธนา (i.e. they were stoned), Heb. xi. 37.: but others fay, that he was put to death by Pharaoh Hophra, because of his prophecy against him. But these scem to be traditions, founded rather on conjecture, than on any certain account of the matter.

Nebuchadnezzar, being returned to Babylon after the end of the Jewish war, and the full fettling of his affairs in Syria and Palestine, did, out of the spoils which he had taken in that expedition, a make that golden image to the honour of Bel his god, which he did fet up, and dedicate to him in the plain of Dura: the history of which is at large related in the 3d chapter of Daniel: but how Daniel escaped the fiery furnace. which his three friends on that occasion were cor demned unto. is made a matter of inquiry by some. That he did not fall down and worship the idol, is most certain; it absolutely difagreeing with the character of that holy religious man, to make his felf guilty of fo high an offence against God, as such a compliance would have amounted unto; either, therefore, he was absent, or else, if present, was not accused. The latter seems most probable; for Nebuchadnezzar, having summoned all his princes, counsellors, governors, captains, and all other his officers and ministers, to be present, and assisting at the solemnity of this dedication, it is not likely, that Daniel, who was one of the chiefest of them, should be allowed to be absent. That he was prefent, therefore, feems most probable: but his enemies thought it fittest not to begin with him, because of the great authority he had with the king; but rather to fall first on his three friends, and thereby pave the way for their more fuccefsful reaching of him after it But what was in the interim miraculoufly done in their case, quashed all further accufation about this natter; and for that reason it was, that Daniel is not at all spoken of in it.

Nebuchadnezzer, in the 21st year of his reign, according to the Jewish account, which was the 19th according to the Babylonish account, and the second from the destruction of Jerusalem, came again into Syria, and laid b fiege to Tyre, Ithobal being then king of

An. 586. Nebuchadnezzar. 19.

b Josephus Antiquities book 10. chap, 11. et contra Apionem iib. 1.

² In the Greek version of Daniel, chap, iii, 1. this is faid to have been dore in the 18th year of Nebuch diezzar. But this is not in the original text; for in that no year at all is mentioned; and therefore it is most probable it crept into it from some marginal comment, for which, I doubt not, there was some very cood authority. For, it could in no year of that king's reign fall more likely; and therefore according hereto I have here placed it that city; which found him hard work for thirteen years together, it being so long before he could make himself master of the place: for it was a strong and wealthy city, which had never as yet submitted to any foreign empire, and was a of great same in those days for its trassic and merchandise, whereby several of its inhabitants had made themselves as great as princes in riches and splendour. It was built by the Zidonians, 240 years before the building of the temple of Solomon at Jerusalem: For Zidon being then conquered and taken by the Philithines of Askelon, many of the inhabitants escaping thence in their ships, built Tyre; and therefore it was called by the prophet Isaiah the daughter of Zidon: but it soon out-grew its mother in largeness, riches, and power, and was thereby enabled to withstand for so many years the power of this mighty king, to whom all the east had then submitted.

While Nebuchadnezzar lay at this fiege, Nebuzaradan, the captain of his guards, being fent out by him with part of his army, invaded the land of Ifrael, to take revenge, as it may be supposed, for the death of Gedaliah, there being no other reason why he should fall on the poor remains of those miserable people, whom he himself had left and settled there. In which expedition f Nebuzaradan, seizing upon all of the race of Israel that he could meet with in the land, made them all captives, and sent them to Babylon. But they all amounted to no more than 745 persons, the rest having been all shed into Egypt, as hath been before related.

By this last captivity was fully completed the desolation of the land, no more of its former inhabitants being now left therein. And hereby were also completed the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and other prophets relating hereto; and particularly 5 that of Ezekiel, wherein God's forbearance of the house of Israel is limited to 390 days, and his forbearance of the house of Judah to 40 days. For, taking the days for years, according to the prophetic stile of scripture, from the apostafy of Jeroboam to the time of this last captivity, there will be just 390 years; and so long God bore the idolatry of the house of Israel: and from the 18th year of Josiah, h when the house of Judah entered into covenant with God to walk wholly in his ways, to the same time will be just 40 years; and so long God bore their walking contrary to that covenant. flated time of his forbearance, in respect of both being fully completed.

a Ezek. xxvi. &. xxvii.

b If. xxiii. 8.

c Joseph. Antiq. b. 8. c. 2.

⁴ Justin lib. 18. c. 3.

e If. xxiii. 12.

f Jer. Iii. 30. g Ezek. iv. 1---8.

b 2 Chron. xxxiv. 29---31,

part

pleted, he completed also the desolation of both in this last captivity, in which both had an equal share, part of them, who were now carried away, being of the house of Judah, and part of the house of Israel. There are others who end both the computations at the destruction of Jerusalem; and, to make their hypothesis good, they begin the 40 years of God's forbearance of the house of Judah from the mission of the prophet Jeremiah to preach repentance unto them, that is, from the 13th of Josiah, a when he was first called to this office; from which time, to the last year of Zedekiah, when Jerusalem was destroyed, were exactly 40 years. And as to the 390 years forbearance of the house of lirael, according as they compute the time from Jeroboam's apostaly, they make this period to fall exactly right also, that is, to contain just 390 years from that time to the destruction of Jerusalem. But this period relating purely to the house of Israel, as contradistinct from the house of Judah, in this prophecy, it cannot be well interpreted to end in the destruction of Jerusalem, in which the house of Israel had no concern: for Jerusalem was not within the kingdom of Ifrael, but within the kingdom of Judah, of which it was the metropolis; and therefore the latter only, and not the former, had their punishment in it. But this last equally affected both; and therefore here may well be ended the reckoning which belonged to both. As to the computing of the 40 years of God's forbearance of the house of Judah from the mission of Jeremiah to preach repentance unto them, it must be acknowledged, that from thence to the destruction of Jerufalem, the number of years falls exactly right; and therefore, fince b the 120 years of God's forbearance of the old world is reckoned from the like mission of Noah to preach repentance unto them, I should be inclined to come into this opinion, and reckon the 40 years of this forbearance of Judah by the 40 years of Jeremiah's like preaching of repentance unto them; but it cannot be conceived, why Ezekiel should reckon the time of his mittion by an æra from the 18th year of Josiah (for the 30th year on which he faith he was called to the prophetic office is certainly to be reckoned from thence), unless it be with respect to the 40 years of God's forbearance of the house of Judah in his own prophecies.

After this, Nebuzaradan arched against the Ammonites; and, having destroyed Rabbah, their royal city, and by sire and sword made great desolation in that country, he carried their king, and their princes, and most of the chief of the land, into captivity: and this was done by way of just revenge for the part which they had in the murder of Gedaliah, the king of Babylon's governor in the land of Ifrael.

^a Je. i. 2. ^b Gen. vi. 3. ^c Jer. xlix, 1.—6. Ezek, xxv. 1.—7. Amos i. 14. 15.

And, during this fiege of Tyre, the other neighbouring nations, that is, the Philistines, the Moabites, the Edomites, and the Zidonians, feem also to have been harassed and broken by the excursions of the Babylonians, and to have had all those judgements executed upon them which we find, in the prophecies of a Jeremiah and b Ezekiel, to have been denounced against them.

In the 14th year after the destruction of Jerusalem, which was the 25th year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, Nebuchadnezzar 31.

Mebuchadnezzar 31.

Graph of God, which we have from the 40th chapter of his prophecies to the end of that book.

This same year, the judgements which God had denounced, by the mouth of his prophets, against Pharaob Hophra, or Apries, king of Egypt, began to operate against him. For the Cyrenians, a colony of the Greeks, that had fettled in Africa, having taken from the Lybians (a neighbouring nation, lying between them and the Egyptians, and bordering upon both, a great part of their land), and divided it among themselves, the Lybians made a surrender both of themselves and their country into the hands of Apries, to obtain his protection. Hereon Apries feat a great army into Lybia, to wage war against the Cyrenians; which, having the misfortune to be beaten and overthrown in battle, were almost all cut off and destroyed, so that very few of them escaped the carnage, and returned again into Egypt: whereon the Egyptians, entertaining an opinion, that this army was fent by Apries into Lybia of purpose to be destroyed, that he might, when rid of them, with the more eafe and fecurity govern the rest, became fo incenfed against him, that a great many of them, embodying together, revolted from him. Apries, hearing of this, fent Amasis, an officer of his court, to appeale them, and reduce them again to their duty. But, while he was speaking to them, they put on his head the enfigns of royalty, and declared him their king; which he accepting of flaid among them, and increafed the revolt. At which Apries, being much incenfed, fent Paterbemis, another officer of his court, and one of the first rank among his followers, to arrest Amasis, and bring him unto him; which he not being able to effect, in the midst of fo great an army of conspir ters as he found about him, was, on his return, very cruelly and unworthily treated by Apries; for, out out of anger for his not effecting that for which he fent him, though he had no power to accomplish it, he outrageously commanded his ears and his nose to be immediantely cut off. Which wrong and indignity offered to a person of his character and worth, so incensed the rest of the Egyptians, that they almost all joined with the conspirators in a general revolt from him. Whereon Apries, being forced to fly, made his escape into the Upper Egypt, towards the borders of Ethiopia; where he maintained himself for some years, while Amasis held all the rest.

^a Jer. xxvii. xxviii. xxix. b Ezek. xxv.

Herodot. lib. 2. & 4. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 1. part 2.

But while this was a-doing in Egypt, at length, a in the 26th year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, which was the 15th after the destruction of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar made himfelf master of Tyre, after a siege b of thirteen years continuance, and utterly destroyed

An. 573. Nebuchadnezzar 32.

the place, that is, the city, which was on the continent; the ruins of which were afterwards called Palæ-Tyrus, or Old Tyre. But, before it came to this extremity, the inhabitants had removed most of their effects into an island about half a mile diftant from the shore, and there built them a new city. And therefore, when Nebuchadnezzar entered that, which he had fo long befieged, he found little there wherewith to reward his foldiers in the spoil of the place, which they had so long laboured to take; and therefore, wrecking his anger upon the buildings. and the few inhabitants who were left in them, he razed the whole town to the ground, and flew all he found therein. After this it never more recovered its former glory; but the city on the island became the Tyre that was afterwards fo famous by that name; the other on the continent never rifing any higher, than to become a village by the name of Old Tyre, as was before faid: That it was this Tyre only that Nebuchadnezzar befreged, and not the other on the island, appears from the description of the fiege, which we have in Ezekiel. For thereby we find, that Nebuchadnezzar made c a fort against the place, and cast up a mount against it, and erected d engines of battery to break down its walls, which could not be faid of the Tyre on the island; for that was all furrounded by the sea. And that he also took, and utterly destroyed that city, appears likewise from the writings e of the fame prophet. But that the city on the island then escaped this fate, is manifest from the Phænician histories; for in them, after the death of Ithobal (who was f flair in the conclusion

^a Ezek xxix. 17.

b Josephus Antiq, lib. 10. c. 11. et contra Apionem lib. 1.

Ezek, xxvi. 8.

d Ezek. xxvi. 9.

Ezek. xxvi. 4. and 9.—12.

f Ez-h. xxviii. 8 .--- 10 conclusion of this war), we are told a that Baal succeeded in the kingdom, and reigned ten years, and that after him fucceeded several temporary magnificates, one after another, who, by the name of judges, had the government of the place. It is most probable, that, after Nebuchadnezzar had taken and destroyed the old town, those who had retired into the island came to terms, and fubmitted to him; and that thereon Baal was deputed to be their king under him, and reigned ten years: that, at the end of the said ten years (which happened in the very year that Nebuchadnezzar was again restored after his distraction), Baal being then dead or deposed, the government, to make it the more dependent on the Babylonians, was changed into that of temporary magistrates; who, instead of the name of kings, had only that of fuffetes, or judges, given unto them; which was a name well known among the Carthaginians, who were descended of the Tyrians; for fo b their chief magistrates were called. It had its derivation from the Hebrew word Shophetim, i. e. judges, which was the very name whereby the chief governors of Israel were called for several generations, before they had kings. And under this fort of government the Tyrians feem to have continued for feveral years after, till they were restored to their former state by Darius Hystaspis seventy years after; as will, in its proper place, be hereafter related.

And here I cannot but observe, how exactly the chronology of the Phænician annals agreeth with that of the holy scriptures. Ezekiel placeth the taking of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar in the 26th year of the captivity of Jehoiachin. For, in the first month, and in the first day of the nonth, of the 27th year, he speaketh (ch. xxix. 17. 18. &c.) of that city as newly taken by Nebuchadnezzar; and therefore the taking of it must have been in the year before, that is, in the 26th of the said captivity. This sell in the c 32d year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, according to the Babylonish account; from which year, according to Ptolemy's canon, the first year of Cyrus at Babylon will be the 36th, and so, according to the Phænician annals, will it be exactly the same. For, d according to them, after the taking of Tyre by Nebuchadnezza.

^{••}

² Josephus contra Apionem, lib. 1.

b Livius lib. 28. Suffetes corum qui fummus est pænis magistratus. Vide ctiam ejustdem lib. 30. et lib. 34. ubi de suffetibus ut de summo apud Carthaginienses magistratu mentio sit.

For the 37th year of the captivity of Jeholachin being the last (which was the 43d) year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings xxv. 27, and Jer. lif. 31.) the 26th year of the said captivity must be in the 32d of Nebuchadnezzar.

d Josephus contra Apionem, lib. 1.

Nebuchadnezzar, Baal had the government of it ten years, and Ecnibal two months, C relbes ten months, Abbar three months, Mitgonus and Jerastratus six years, Balator one year, Merball four years, and Hirom twenty years, in whose 14th year, say the same annals, Cyrus began his empire. And, putting all these together, the 14th of Hirom will be exactly the 36th year from the 32d of Nebuchadnezzar, which was the 26th of the captivity of Jehoiachin, the year, according to Ezekiel, in which Tyre was taken. And therefore, it doth hereby appear, that the said Phænician annals place the taking of Ty e in the very same year that Ezekiel doth: for the 26th year from the captivity of Jehoiachin computed downward, in which Ezekiel placeth it, and the 36th year from the 14th of Hirom computed upward, in which the Phænician annals place it, will be exactly the same year.

Nebuchadnezzar and his army having ferved fo long before Tyre, a "till every head was bald, and every shoulder peeled," through the length and hardships of the war, and gotten little on the taking of the place to reward him and his army for their fervice in executing the wrath of God upon the place, by reason that the Tyrians had saved the best of their effects in the illand; God did, by the prophet Ezekiel, promife them the spoils of Egypt. And accordingly, this very same year, immediately after this flege was over, Nebuchadnezzar, taking the advantage of the intestine divisions which were then in that country, by reason of the revolt of Amasis, marched with his army thither, and over-run ang the whole land, from b Migdol, or Magdolum (which is at the first entering into Egypt), even to Syene (which is at the farthest end of it towards the borders of Ethiopia), he made ca miserable ravage and devastation therein, flaying multitudes of the inhabitants, and reducing a great part of the country to such a desolation, as it did not recover from in d forty years after. After this Nebuchadnezzar having loaded himfelf and his army with the rich spoils of this country, and brought it all in subjection to him, he came to terms with Amasis; and having confirmed him in the kingdom, as his deputy, returned to Babylon.

Vol. I. G During

a Ezek. xxix. 18—20. & xxx. 1—19. b Ezek. xxix. 6. Where onferve this possible (from the tower of Syene) in the English transition of the Bible is wrong translated. For the Hebrew word Migdol, which is there transit ded tower, is the name of the city Magdolum, which was at the entrance of Egypt from Palestine, i.e. at the hither end of Egypt; whereas Syene was at the other end upon the borders of Ethiopia; the translation ought to be thus (from Migdol to Syene), that is, from one end of Egypt to the other.

c Ezek. xxix. 30—32. d Ezek. xxix 13.

During this ravage of the land of Egypt by the Babylonians, most of the Jews, who had fled thither after the murder of Gedaliah, fell into their hands. a Many of them they slew; others they carried captive with them to Babylon. The few that escaped saved themselves by slying out of Egypt, and asterwards settled again in their own land at the end of the captivity.

After Nebuchadnezzar was gone out of Egypt, Apries, creeping out of his hiding places, got towards the fea-An. 570. coasts, most likely into the parts of Lybia; and Nebuchadthere b hiring an army of Carians, lonians, and nezzar. 35. other foreigners, marched against Amass, and gave him battle near the city of Memphis; in which being vanquished and taken prisoner, he was carried to the city of Sais, and there strangled in his own palace. And hereby were completed all the prophecies of the prophets c Jeremiah, and d Ezekiel, which they had foretold both concerning him and his people; especially that of Jeremiah, relating to his death, whereby it was foreshewn, " That God would give Pharaoh Hophra, king of Egypt, into the hands of his enemies, and into the hand of them that fought his life, as he gave Zedekiah, king of Judah, into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, his enemy, that fought his life:" Which was exactly fulfilled, on his being taken prisoner, and executed by Amasis in the manner as I have faid. It is remarked of him f by Herodotus, that he was of that pride and high conceit of himself, as to vaunt, that it was not in the power of God himself to disposses him of his kingdom, fo furely he thought himself established in it; and agreeably hereto is it, that the prophet Ezekiel chargeth him with faying, g "The river is mine, and I have made it." For the first 20 years of his reign, he had enjoyed as prosperous a fortune as most of his predecessors, having h had many fuccesses against the Cypriots, the Zidonians, the Philistines, and other nations; but after he took on himfelf, Caligula like, to be thought as a god, he fell from his former state, and made that miserable exit which I have related. After his death, Amafis, without any farther opposition, became possessed of the whole kingdom

^{*} Jer. xliv. 27. 28.

b Herodotus, lib. 2. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 1. part 2.

c Chap. xhii. xliv. xlv.

d Chap, xxix, xxx, xxxi, xxxii,

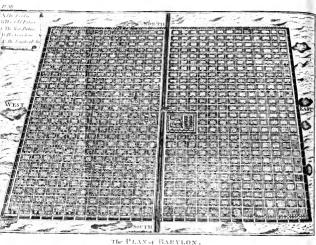

[•] Jer. xliv. 30.

f Herodotus, lib. 2.

Ezek. xxix. 9.

h Herodotus, lib. 2. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 7. part 2. Jer. xlvii, 1-

Herodotus, ibid. Diodorus, ibid.

kingdom of Egypt, and held it from the death of Apries, 44 years. This happened in the 19th year after the destruction of Jerufalem.

In the same 19th year, Nebuchadnezzar being returned from this Egyptian expedition to Babylon, had there the dream of the wonderful great tree, and the cutting down thereof; of which, and the interpretation of it, there is a full account in the 4th chapter of Daniel.

Nebuchadnezzar being now at rest from all his wars, and in full peace at home, applied himself to the finishing of his buildings at Babylon. a Semiramis is faid by force, and b Belus by others, to have first founded this city. But by whomsoever it was first founded, it was Nebuchadnezzar that made it one of the wonders of the world. The c most famous works therein, were, if, the walls of the city; 2dly, the temple of Belus; 3dly, his palace, and the hanging gardens in it; 4thly, the banks of the river; and, 5thly, the artificial lake, and artificial canals made for the draining of that river. In the magnificence and expence of which works he much exceeded whatfoever had been done by any king before him. And, excepting the walls of China, nothing like it hath been fince attempted, whereby any one elfe can be equalled to him herein.

1/2, The walls were every way prodigious: for they d were in thickness 87 feet, in height 350 feet, and in compass 480 furlongs, which make fixty of our miles. This is Herodotus's account of them, who was himfelf at Babylon, and is the most ancient author that hath wrote of this matter. And although there are others that differ from him herein, yet the most that agree in any measures of those walls, give us e the same, or very near the fame, he doth. Those who lay the height of them at 50 cubits, speak of them only as they were, after the time of Darius Hystaspis: for the Babylonians having revolted from him and, in confidence of their strong walls, stood out against him in a long fiege, after he had taken the place; to f prevent their rebellion for the future, he took away their gates, and beat down their walls to the height last mentioned; and beyond this they were never after raifed. These walls were drawn round the city in the form of f an exact square, each side of which

² Herodot. lib. r. Ctesias, Justin, lib. 1. c. 2...

d Herodotus, lib. 1.

f Herodotus, lib. 3.

b Q. Curtius, lib. 5. c. 1. Abydenus ex Megasthene apud Euseb. Præps Evang. lib.

⁶ Berofus apud Joseph. Autiq. lib. 10. c. 21. Abydenus apud Euseb. Præp. Evang, lib. 9.

Elinius, iib. 6. c. 26. Philostratus, lib. i. c. 18.

was 120 furlongs, or 15 miles in length, and a all built of large bricks, cemented together with bitumen, a glutinous slime arifing out of the earth in that country, which binds in building much fironger and firmer than lime, and foon grows much harder than the brick or flones themselves which it cements together. These walls were surrounded on the outside with a vast dites filled with water, and lined with bricks on both fides, after the manner of a fearp or counterfearp, and the earth which was dug out of it, made the bricks, wherewith the walls were built; and therefore, from the vast height and breadth of the walls may be inferred the greatness of the ditch. In every side of this great square were 25 gates, that is, an 100 in all, which were all made of folid brais; and hence it is, that, when God promifed to Cyrus the conquest of Babylon, he tells him, "that he would break in pieces before him the gates of brafs," (If. xlv. 2.). Between every two of these gates, were three towers, and four more at the four corners of this great square, and three bezween each of these corners and the next gate on either fide; and every one of these towers was ten feet higher than the walls. But this is to be understood only b of those parts of the wall where there was need of towers : for some parts of them lying against morasses always full of water, where they could not be approached by an enemy, they had there no need of any towers at all for their defence; and therefore in them there were none built; for the whole number of them amounted to no more than 250; whereas, had the same uniform order been observed in their disposition all round, there must have been many more. From the 25 gates on each fide of this great square, went 25 Areets in straight lines to the gates, which were directly over against them in the other side opposite to it. So that the whole number of the fireets were 50, each fifteen miles long, whereof 25 went one way, and 25 the other, c directly croffing each other at right angles. And besides these, there were also four half ftreets, which were built but of one fide, as having the wall on the other. These went round the four sides of the city next the walls, and d were each of them 200 feet broad, and the rest were about 150. By these streets thus crossing each other, the whole city was cut out into 676 fquares, each of which was four furlongs and an half on every fide, that is, two miles and a quarter in compass. Round these squares, on every fide, towards the ² Herodot, lib. 1. Q. Curtius, lib. 5, c. 1. Strabo, lib. 16. Died. Sielib. 3. Arianus de Expeditione Alexandri, lib. 7.

b Diodorus Siculus, lib. 2. S Herodotus, lib. 1.

d Two Platers, faith Diodores, that is 20: feet, for a p'ellerum confained 100 feet.

Areets, stood the houses, all built 3 or 4 stories high, and beaufied a with all manner of adornments towards the fireets. The fpace within, in the middle of each fquare, was all void ground, employed for yards, gardens, and other fuch uses. A branch of the river Euphrates did run quite crofs the city, entering in on the north fide, and going out on the fouth; over which, in the middle of the city, was a bridge of b a furlong in length, and thirty feet in breadth, built with c wonderful art, to supply the defect of a foundation in the bottom of the river, which was all fandy. At the two ends of the bridge were d two palaces, the old palace on the east fide, and the new palace on the west fide of the river; the former of these took up c four of the squares above mentioned, and the other f nine of them; and the temple of Belus, which flood next the old palace, took up another of these squares. The whole city stood on a s large flat or plain, in a very fat and deep foil. That part of it h which was on the east fide of the river, was the old city; the other on the west side was added by Nebuchadnezzar. Both together were included within that vast square I have mentioned. The pattern hereof feemeth to have been taken from Nineveh, that having been exactly 1 480 furlongs round, as this was. For Nebuchadnezzar having, in conjunction with his father, destroyed that old royal feat of the Affyrian empire, refolved to make this which he intended should succeed it in that dignity altogether as large; only, whereas Nineveh was k in the form of parallelogram, he made Babylon in that of an exact square; which figure rendered it somewhat the larger of the two. To fill this great and large city with inhabitants, was the reason that Nebuchadnezzar, out of Judea and other conquered countries, carried fo great a number of captives thither. And could he have made it as populous as it was great, there was no country in all the east could better, than that in which it stood, have maintaineđ.

a Herodotus, lib. r. Philostratus, lib. r.

C D'odorus Siculus, lib. 2. Q. Curtius, lib. 5. c. 1. Philostratus, lib. 1.

c. 18. Herodotus, lib. 1.

e It was 30 furlongs in compafe, Diodorus Sicul. lib. 2.

f It was 60 furlougs in compafs, Diodor. ibid.

g Herodotus, lib. 1.

h Diodorus Siculus, lib. 2.

i Diodorus, ibid.

* Two of its fides were each 150 furlongs long, and the other but 80 each, Diodor, ibid.

b Strabo faith, that the river which passed through Babylon, was a furlong broad (lib.16.); but Diodorus faith (lib.2.) that the bridge was five furloops long; if so, it must be much longer than the river was broad.

d Berofus apud Joseph. Antiq. lib. 10. c. 11. Herodotus, lib. 1. Diodor. Sic. lib. 2. Q. Curtius, lib. 5. c. 1. Philostratus, lib. 1. c. 18.

ed fo great a number of people, as must then have been in it: for the fertility of this province was fo great, 2 that it yielded to the Persian kings, during their reign over Asia, half as much as did all that large empire befides; the common return of their tillage being between two and three hundred fold every crop. But it never happened to have been b fully inhabited; it not having had time enough to grow up thereto; for, within 25 years after the death of Nebuchadnezzar, the royal feat of the empire was removed from thence to Shushan by Cyrus; which did put an end to the growing glory of Babylon; for after that it never more flourished When Alexander came to Babylon, Currius tells us, b no more t an 90 furlongs of it was then built; which can no otherwise be understood, than of so much in length; and if we allow the breadth to be as much as the length which is the utmost that can be allowed), it will follow, that no more than 8,00 square furlongs were then built upon; but the whole space within the walls contained 14400 square furlongs; and therefore there must have been 6300 square surlongs that were unbuilt, which Curtius b tells us were plowed and fown. And, besides this, the houses were not contiguous, but all built with a void space on each fide between house and house. And the same historian tells us, this was done because this way of building feemed to them the fafest. His words are, Ac ne totam quidem urbem tectis occupaverunt, per 90 fladia, babitatur; nec omnia continua funt, credo quia tutius vifum est pluribus locis spargi; i. e. 'Neither was the whole city built upon, for the space of 90 furlongs it was inhabited; but the houses were not contiguous, because they thought it safest to be dispersed in many places distant from each other. Which words (they thought it safest) are to be understood, not as if they did this for the better securing of their houses from fire, as some interpret them, but chiefly for the better preferving of health. For hereby, in cities fituated in fuch hot countries, those suffocations and other inconveniences are avoided, which must necessarily attend such as there dwell in houses closely built together. For which reason Delhi, the capital of India, and feveral other cities in those warmer parts of the world, are thus built; the usage of those places beang, the fuch a flated space of ground be left void between every house and to see, that is built in them. And old Rome was built after the fame manner. So that, putting all this together, it will appear, that Bat ylon was fo large a city, rather in scheme than in reality. F r, according to this account, it must be by much the larger part that was never built; and therefore, in this respect, it must give place to Nineveh, which was as many furlongs in circuit, as the other and without any void ground in it that we are told of. And the number of its infants at the fame time, which could not difcern between their right hand and their left, which the feriptures tell us were 120,000 in the time of Jonah, doth fufficiently prove it was fully inhabited. It was intended indeed, that Babylon should have exceeded it in every thing. But Nebuchadnezzar did not live long enough, nor the Babylonish empire last long enough, to finish the scheme that was first drawn of it.

^{*} Harodotus, lib. r.

The next great work of Nebuchadnezzar at Babylon was the temple a of Belus. But that which was most remarkable in it, was none of his work, but was built many ages before. It was a wonderful tower that stood in the middle of it. At the foundation, b it was a square of a furlong on each fide, that is, half a mile in the whole compass, and confisted of eight towers, one built above over the other. Some following a mistake of the Latin version of Herodotus, wherein the lowest of these towers is faid to be a furlong thick and a furlong high, will have each of these towers to have been a furlong high, which amounts to a mile in the whole. But the Greek of Herodotus, which is the authentic text of that author, faith no fuch thing, but only, that it was a furlong long and a furlong broad, without mentioning any thing of its height at all. And Strabo, in his description of it, calling it a pyramid, because of its decreasing or benching-in at every tower, c faith of the whole, that it was a furlong high, and a furlong on every fide. To reckon every tower a furlong, and the whole a mile high, would shock any man's belief, were the authority of both these authors for it, much more, when there is none at all. Taking it only as it is described by Strabo, it was prodigous enough: for, according to his demensions only, without adding any thing further, it was one of the most wonderful works in the world, and much exceeding the greatest of the pyramids of Egypt, which hath been thought to excel all other works in the world befides. For although it fell short of that pyramid at the basis, (where that was a square of 700 feet on every fide, and this but of 600), yet it far exceeded it in the height; the perpendicular measure of the said pyramid being no more than 481 feet, whereas that of the other, was full 600; and therefore it was higher than that pyramid by 119 feet, which is one quarter of the whole. And therefore it was not without reason, that e Bochartus afferts it to have been the very d See Mr Greave's description of the pyramids, p. 68. 69. Phales, part 1, lib. 1, c. 9.

G 4 fame

^a Berofus apud Josephum Antiq. lib. 10. c. 11. i Herodotus, lib. 1.

^c Strabo, lib. 16.

fame tower which was there built at the confusion of tongues. For it was prodigious enough to answer the scriptures description of it; and it is particularly attested by several authors to have been all built a of bricks and bitumen, as the fcriptures tell us the tower of Babel was. Herodotus faith, that the going up to it was by stairs on the outside round it; from whence it feems most likely, that the whole ascent to it was by the benching-in drawn in a flopping line from the bottom to the top eight times round it; that this made the appearance of eight towers one above another, in the same manner as we have the tower of Babel commonly described in pictures; faving only, that whereas that is usually pictured round, this was square For such a benching-in drawn in a flope eight times round in manner as aforefaid, would make the whole feem on every fide as confifting of eight towers, and the upper tower to be fo much less than that next below it, as the breadth of the benching-in amounted to. These eight towers being as so many stories one above another, were each of them 75 feet high, and in them were many great rooms with arched roofs supported by pillars. All which were made parts of the temple, after the tower became confecrated to that idolatrous use. The uppermost story of all was that which was most facred, and where their chiefest devotions were performed. Over the whole, on the top of the tower, was an observatory, "by the benefit of which it was, that the Babylonians advanced their skill in astronomy beyond all other nations, and came to fo early a perfection in it, as is related. For when Alexander took Babylon, Califthenes the philosopher, who accompanied him thither, found they had aftronomical observations for 1903 years backwards from that time: which carrieth up the account as high as the 115th year after the flood, which was within 15 years after the tower of B bel was built. For the confusion of tongues, which followed immediately after the building of that tower, happened in the year wherein Peleg was born, which was 101 years after the flood, and 14 years after that these observations began. This account Califthenes sent from Babylon into Greece, to his maller Aristotle; as Symplicius, from the authority of Porphyry, delivers it unto us in his fecoud book De Colo. Till the time of Nebuchadnezzar, the temple of Belus contained no more than this tower only, and the rooms in it ferved all the occasions of that idolatrous worship. But che enlarged it, by vast buildings crected round it, in da

' Herodotus, lib. 1.

⁴ Strabo, lib. 16. Herodotus, lib. 1. Diodor. Sic. lib. 2. Arrian. de Expedicione Alexandri lib. 7.

b Diodor. Sic. lib. 2. p. 93.
Berofus apud Josephum Antiq. lib. 10. c. 11.

fguare of two furlongs on every file, and a mile in circumference, which was 1800 feet more than a the square at the temple of Jerusalem: for that was but 3000 feet round; whereas this was, according to this account, 4800. And, on the outfide of all these buildings, there was a wall inclosing the whole, which may be supposed to have been of equal extent with the square in which it flood, that is, two miles and an half in compass; in which were feveral gates leading into the temple, all b of folid brafs; and the brafen fea, the brafen pillars, and the other brafen veffels, which were carried to Babylon from the temple of Jerufalem, feem to have been employed to the making of them. For it is faid, that Nebuchadnezzer did put all the facred veffels, which he carried from Jerufalem, a into the house of his god at Babylon, that is, into this house or temple of Bel; for that was the name of the great god of the Babylonians. He is supposed to have been the same with Nimrod, and to have been called Bel from his dominion, and Nimrod from his rebellion: for Bel, or Baal, which is the fame name, fignifieth lord, and Nimr d, a rebel, in the Jewish and Chaldean languages: the former was his Babylonith name, by reason of his empire in that place, and the latter his feripture name, by reason of his rebellion, in revolting from God to follow his own wicked defigns. This temple flood till the time of Xerxes: but he, on his return from his Grecian expedition, d demolithed the whole of it, and laid it all in rubbish; having first plundered it of all its immense riches, among which were several images or fratues of maffy gold, and one of them is faid, by e Diodorus Siculus, to have been 40 feet high, which might perchance have been that which Nebuchadnezzar confecrated in the plains of Dura. Nebuchadnezzar's golden image is faid indeed in scripture to have been 60 cubits, i. e. 90 feet high: But that must be understood of the image and pedestal both together: for that image being faid to have been but fix cubits broad or thick, it is impossible that the image could have been 60 cubits high; for that makes its height to be ten times its breadth or thickness, which exceeds all the proportions of a · man, no man's height being above fix times his thickness, meafuring the flenderest man living at his waist. But where the breadth of this image was measured is not said: perchance it a For it was a square of 500 cubits on every side, and 2000 in the whole, i.e. 3000 feet. See Lightfoot's description of the temple of Jerusalem.

· Dan. i. 2. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7.

b Herodot, lib. 1.

¹ Strabo, lib. 16. p. 738. Herodot. lib. 1. Arrianus de Expeditione Alexandri, lib. 7. 9 Lib. 2.

was from shoulder to shoulder; and then the proportion of six cubits breadth will bring down the height exactly to the meafure which Diodorus hath mentioned: for the usual height of a man being four and a half of his breadth between the shoulders, if the image were fix cubits broad between the shoulders, it must, according to this proportion, have been 27 cubits high, which is 40 t feet. Besides, Diodorus a tells us, that this image of 40 feet high, contained 1000 Babylovith talents of gold, which, according to Pollux (who, in his Onomasticon, reckons a Babylonish talent to contain 7000 Attic drachma's, i. e. 875 ounces) b amounts to three millions and an half of our money. But, if we advance the height of the statue to 90 feet without the pedestal, it will increase the value to a sum incredible; and therefore it is necessary to take the pedestal also into the height mentioned by Daniel. Other images and facred utenfils were also in that temple, all of solid gold. Those that are particularly mentioned by Diodorus contain 5030 talents, which, with the 1000 talents in the image above mentioned, amount to above 21 millions of our money. And, besides this, we may well suppose the value of as much more in treasure and utcofils not mentioned, which was a vast sum. But it was the collection of near 2000 years; for fo long that temple had flood. All this Xerxes took away, when he destroyed it. And perchance to recruit himfelf with the plunder, after the vaft expence which he had been at in his Grecian expedition, was that which chiefly excited him to the destruction of it, what other reason soever might be pretended for it. Alexander, on his return to Babylon from his Indian expedition, c purposed again to have rebuilt it: and, in order hereto, he did fet 10,000 men on work to rid the place of its rubbish: but, after they had laboured herein two months, Alexander died, before they had perfected much of the undertaking; and this did put an end to all farther proceedings in that defign. Had he lived, and made that city the feat of his empire, as it was a supposed he would, the glory of Babylon would no doubt have been advanced by him to the utmost height that ever Nebuchadnezmar intended to have brought it to, and it would again have been the queen of the East.

Next this temple, con the fame east fide of the river, stood b This is according to the lowest computation, valuing an Attic drachm at no more than seven pence halfpenny, whereas Dr Bernard neckons it to be eight pence farthing, which would amount the sum much higher.

C. Střábo, lib. 16. Josephus contra Apionem, lib. 1. Arrianus de Expeditione Alexandri, lib. 7.

d Strabo, lib. 15. p. 731.

Diodor. Sic. lib. 2. Philostrat. lib. 1. c. 18.

the old palace of the kings of Babylon, being four miles in compals. Exactly over against it, on the other side of the river, a stood the new palace; and this was that b which Nebuchadnezzar built. It was four times as big as the former, as being c eight miles in compass. It was furrounded with three walls, one within another, and strongly fortified, according to the way of those times. But what was most wonderful in it were the hanging gardens, which were of fo celebrated a name among the Greeks. They d contained a square of four plethra (that is, of 400 feet) on every fide, and were carried up aloft into the air, in the manner of feveral large terraces, one above another, till the highest equalled the height of the walls of the city. The afcent was from terrace to terrace, by flairs ten feet wide. The whole pile was fuffained by vast arches built upon arches, one above another, and strengthened by a wall, surrounding it on every side, of 22 feet in thickness. The floors of every one of these terraces were laid in the same manner; which was thus: On the top of the arches were first laid large stat stones, 16 feet long, and four broad, and over them was a laver of reed, mixed with a great quantity of bitumen, over which were two rows of bricks, closely cemented together by plaster, and then over all were laid thick sheets of lead, and, lastly, upon the lead was laid the mould of the garden: and all this floorage was contrived to keep the moisture of the mould from running away down through the arches. The mould or earth laid hereon was of that depth, as to have room enough for the greatest trees to take rooting in it; and fuch were planted all over it in every terrace, as were also all other trees, plants, and flowers, that were proper for a garden of pleafure. In the upper terrace there was an aqueduct or engine, whereby water was drawn up out of the river, which from thence watered the whole garden. Amyitis, the wife of Nebuchadnezzar, having been bred in Media (for the was the daughter of Aftyages, the king of that country, as hath been before related), had been much taken with the mountainous and woody parts of that country. and therefore defired to have fomething like it at Babylon: and to gratify her herein was the reason of erecting this monstrous work of vanity.

The other works attributed to him, by Berofus and Abydenus, were the banks of the river, and the artificial canals, ² Diodor. Sic. lib. 2. Philostratus, lib. 1. c. 18.

b Berefus apud Joseph. lib. 10. c. 11. C Diodor. lib. 2. Herodot. lib. 1.

f Apud Eusebium Præpar, Evang, lib. 9.

d Diodor, Sic. lib. 2. Strabo, lib. 16. Q. Curtius, lib. 5. c. 1.
Apud Joseph. Antiq. lib. 10. c. 11. et contra Apionem, lib. 2.

and artificial lake, which were made for draining of it in the times of overflows: for, a on the coming on of the fummer, the fun melting the fnow on the mountains of Armenia, from thence there is always a great overflow of water during the months of June, July, and August, which, running into the Euphrates, makes it overflow all its banks during that feafon, in the fame manner as doth the river Nile in Egypt; whereby the city and country of Babylon fuffering great damage, for b the preventing hereof, he did, a great way up the stream, cut out of it, on the east fide, two artificial canals, thereby to drain off these overflowings into the Tigris, before they should reach Babylon. The c farthest of these was the current which did run into the Tigris near Seleucia, and the other that which, taking its course between the last mentioned and Babylon, discharged ittelf into the same river over against Apamia; which being very large, and navigable for great veffels, d was from thence called Naharmalcha, that is, in the Chaldean language, the royal river. Tois is faid to have been made by Gobaris, or Gobrias, who, being the governor of the province, had the overfeeing of the work committed to his care, and feemeth to have been the same who afterwards, on a great wrong done him, revolted from the Babylonians to Cyrus, as will be hereafter related. And, for the farther fecuring of the country, Nebuchadnezzar built falfo prodigious banks of brick and bitumen on each fide of the river, to keep it within its channel, which g were carried along from the head of the faid canals down to the city, and some way below it. But the most wonderful part of the work was within the city itself: for there, hon each side of the river, he built from the bottom of it a great wall, for its bank, of brick and bitumen, which was of the fame thickness with the walls of the city; and, over against every street that crossed the faid river, he made, on each fide, a brasen gate in the said wall, and stairs leading down from it to the river, from whence the citizens used to pass by boat from one fide to the other, which was the only passage they had over the river, till the bridge was built, which I have above mentioned. The gates were open by day, but al-

² Strabo, lib. 16. Plin. lib. 5. c. 26. Arrianus de Expeditione Alexandri, lib. 7. Q. Curtius, lib. 5. c. 1.

b Abydenus apud Eufeb. Præp. Evang. lib. 9.

CPtol. lib. 5. c. 18. Plin. lib. 5. c. 26.

d Abydenus, ibid. Itol. ibid. Plin. lib. 6. c. 26. Polybius, lib. 5. Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 24. Strabo, lib. 16. p. 747. Ifidorus Charace-2018 de Stathmis Parthicis.

e Plin. lib. 6. c. 26.

f Abydenus, ibid.
Herodotus, lib. 1.

^{*} Berofus apud Joseph. Antig. lib. 10. C. 11.

ways that by night. And this prodigious work a was carried on, on both fides of the river, to the length of 160 furlongs, which is 20 miles of our measure; and therefore must have been begun two miles and an half above the city, and continued down two miles and an half below it; for through the city was no more than 15 miles. While thefe banks were a building, the river was turned another way: for which purpose, to the west of Babylonb, was made a prodigious artificial lake, which was, e according to the lowest computation, 40 miles square, and 160 in compass; and in depth 35 feet, faith Herodotus; 75, faith Megasthenes. The former scems to measure from the surface of the fides, and the other from the top of the banks that were cast up upon them. And into this lake was the whole river turned by an artificial canal cut from the west fide of it, till all the faid work was finished, and then it was returned again into its own former channel. But that the faid river, in the time of its increase, might not, through the gates above mentioned, overflow the city, this lake, with the canal leading thereto, was still preserved, and proved the best and the most effectual means to prevent it; for whenever the river rose to fuch an height, as to endanger this overflowing, it always difcharged itself, by this canal, into the lake, through a passage in the bank of the river, at the head of the faid canal, made there of a pitch fit for this purpose, whereby it was prevented from ever rifing any higher below that place. And the water received into the lake, at the time of these overflowings, was there kept all the year, as in a common refervatory, for the benefit of the country, to be let out by finices, at all convenient times, for the watering of the lands below it. So it equally ferved the convenience of Babylon, and also the convenience of that part of the province, in improving their lands, and making them the more fertile and beneficial to them; though at last it became the cause of great mischief to both: for it afforded to Cyrus the means of taking the city, and, in the effecting thereof, became the cause of drowning a great part of that country, which was never after again recovered; of both which an account will be hereafter given in its proper place. Berofus, Megasthenes, and Abydenus, attribute all these works to Nebuchadnezzar; but Herodotus tells us, that the bridge, the river banks, and the lake, were the work of Nitocris, his daughter-

² Dioderus, lib. 2. p. 96.

b Abydenus, ibid. Herodotus, lib. r. Diodorus, ibid.

According to Herodotus, this lake was 420 furlongs fquare, i.e. 52 miles and an half on every fide, and then the whole compais must be 210 miles; but, according to Megasthenes, the whole compass was but according a, i.e. 160 miles, for each parasanga contained 4 of our miles in-law. Perhaps Nitocris finished what Nebuchadnezzar had left unperfected at his death, and this procured her, with that historian, the honour of the whole.

All the flat whereon Babylon flood being, by reason of so many rivers and canals running through it, made in many places marshy, especially near the said rivers and canals, this caused it to abound much in willows; and therefore it is called in scripture, The valley of willows, (for so the words, Is. xv. 7. which we translate, the brook of the willows, ought to be rendered): and, for the same reason, the Jews (Pal. cxxxvii. 1.2) are said, when they were by the rivers of Babylon, in the land of their captivity, to have hung their harps upon the willows, that is, because of the abundance of them which grew by those rivers.

At the end a of twelve months after Nebuchadnezzar's last dream, while he was walking in his palace at Baby-An. 569. lon, most likely in his hanging gardens, and in the Nebuchaduppermost terrace of them, from whence he might have a full prospect of the whole city, he, proudly boaffing of his great works done therein, faid, b "Is not this great Babylon, which I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" But, while the words were yet in his mouth, there came a voice to him from heaven to rebuke his pride, which told him, that his kingdom was departed from him, and that he should be driven from the society of men, and thenceforth, for feven years, have his dwelling with the wild beafts of the field, there to live like them in a brutal manner. And immediately hereon, his fenses being taken from him, he fell into a distracted condition; and, continuing fo for feven years, he lived abroad in the fields, eating grafs like the oxen, and taking his lodgings on the ground, in the open air, as they did, till his hair was grown like eagles feathers, and his nails like birds claws. But, at the end of feven years, his understanding returning unto him, he was restored again to his kingdom, and his former majest and honour re-established on him.

And hereon, being made fully sensible of the almighty power of the God of heaven and earth, and that it is he only that doth all things according to his will, both in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and by his everlasting dominion disposeth of all things at his good pleasure, he did, by a public decree, make acknowledgement hereof through all the Babylonish empire, praising his almighty power, and magnifying his mercy in his late restoration shewn upon him.

After this he lived only one year, and died, having reigned,

according

according to the Babylonish account, from the death of his father, 43 years, and according to the Jewish account, from his first coming with an army into Syria, 45 years. His death happened about the end of the year, a little before the conclusion of the 37th year of the captivity of Jehoiachin. He was one of the greatest princes that had reigned in the east for many ages before him. Megasthenes a prefers him for his valour to Hercules. But his greatness, riches, and power, did in nothing more appear, than in his prodigious works at Babylon above described, which, for many ages after, were spoken of as the wonders of the world. is b faid at his death to have prophefied of the coming of the Persians, and their bringing of the Babylonians in subjection to them. But in this he spake no more, than what he had been informed of by Daniel the prophet, and, in the interpretation of his dreams, been affured by him should speedily come to pass, as accordingly it did within 23 years after.

An. 561. Nebuchad= nezzar 43.

On the death of this great prince, c Evilmerodach his fon fucceeded him in the Babylonish empire; and, as foon as he was fettled in the throne, he released Jehoiachin, king of Judah, out of prison, after he had lain there near 37 years, and promoted him to great honour in his palace, admitting him to eat bread continually at table, and placing him there before all the other kings and great men of his empire, that came to him to Babylon, and also made him a daily allowance to support him, with an equipage in all things else fuitable hereto. Jerome d tells us, from an ancient tradition of the Jews, that Evilmerodach, having had the government of the Babylonish empire during his father's distraction, administered it so ill, that, as soon as the old king came again to himself, he put him in prison for it; and that the place of his imprisonment happening to be the same where Jehoiachin had long lain, he there entered into a particular acquaintance and friendship with him; and that this was the cause of the great kindness which he afterwards shewed him. And since the old historical traditions of the Jews e are often quoted in the New Testament, if this were such, it is not wholly to be difregarded, and that especially since the mal-administrations, which Evilmerodach

An. 561. Evilmero-

² Abydenus ib. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 10. c. 11. Strabo, lib. 15. p. 687.

h Abydenus ibid.

e 2 Kings xxv. 27. Jeremiah lii. 31. Berofus apud Josephum contra Apionem, lib. 1. et Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. 9.

d Comment, in Esaiam xiv. 19. e By St Stephen, Acts vii. By St Paul, Hebrews xi. 35.—37. and to Timothy, Eph. iii. 8. and by St Jude 9. 14. 15.

merodach was guilty of after his father's death, give reason enough to believe, that he could not govern without them before. For he a proved a very profligate and vicious prince, and for that reason was called Evilmerodach, that is, foolish Merodach; for his proper name was only Merodach. But, whatfoever was the inducing reason, this favour he shewed to the captive prince; as foon as his father was dead. So that the last year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign was the last of the 37 years of Jehoiachin's captivity; and this shews us when it begun, and serves to the connecting of the chronology of the Babylonish and Jewish history in all other particulars. For which reason it may be useful to have a particular state of this matter, which I take to have been as followeth. In the 7th year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, according to the Babylonish account, b in the beginning of the Jewish year, that is, in the month of April according to our year, Jehoiachin was carried captive to Babylon. And therefore the first year of his captivity, beginning in the month of April, in the 7th year of Nebuchadnezzar, the 37th year of it must begin in the same month of April, in the 43d year of Nebuchadnezzar; towards the end whereof that great king dying, with the beginning of the next year began the first year of the reign of Evilmerodach; and the March following, c that is, on the 27th day of the 12th or last month of the Jewish year, Jehoiachin was, by the great favour of the new king released from his captivity, in the manner as is above expressed, about a month before he had fully completed 37 years in it.

In the fame year, which was the first of Evilmerodach at Babylon, d Cræsus succeeded Alyattes his father in the kingdom of Lydia, and reigned there 14 years. This was the 28th year after the destruction of Jerusalem, and the 46th of the 70 years captivity of Judah.

When Evilmerodach had reigned two years at Babylon, his lufts, and his other wickedness, made him so intolerable, ethat at length even his own relations conspired against him, and put him to death, and so Neriglissan his sister's husband, who was the head of the conspiracy against him, reigned in his stead. And since it is said, that Jehoiachin was sed by him until the day of his death, it is inferred.

^a Derofus ibid.

b 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. For there it is faid, that it was at the return of the year.

² Kings xxxv. 27. Jer. lii. 31.

d Herodotus, lib. 1,

^e Berofusibid. Megasthenesapud Eusebium Præp. Evang. lib. 9.

f Berofus ibid. Ptol. in Canone. Josephus Antiq. lib. 10. c. 12. Megasthenes, ibid.

⁶ Jer. 111. 32.

ferred from hence, that he did not outlive him, but that he either died a little before him, or else, as a favourite, was slain with him. The last seemeth most propable, as best agreeing with the prophecy of Jeremiah concerning him; for it is therein denounced against him, a that he should not prosper in his days; which could not be so well verified of him, if he died in full possession of all that prosperity which Evilmerodach advanced him unto.

On the death of Jehoiachin, Salathiel, his fon, became the nominal prince of the Jews after him. For, after the lofs of the authority, they still kept up the title; and for a great many ages after, in the parts about Babylon, there was always one of the house of David, which, by the name of c The Head of the captivity, was acknowledged and honoured as a prince among that people, and had some fort of jurisdiction, as far as it was confistent with the government they were under, always invested in him, and sometimes a ratification was obtained of it from the princes that reigned in that country. And it is faid, this d pageantry is still kept up among them; and chiefly, it feems, that they may be furnished from hence with an answer to give the Christians, when they urge the prophecy of Jacob against them: for, whensoever, from that prophecy, it is pressed upon them, that the Messiah must be come, because the sceptre is now departed from Judah, and there is no more a lawgiver among them from between his feet, we are commonly told of This Head of the captivity; their usual answer being, that the fceptre is still preserved among them in the Head of the captivity; and that they have also in their e Nasi, or prince of the Sanhedrim (another peageantry officer of theirs), a lawgiver from between the feet of Judah (that is of his feed) ftill remaining in Ifrael. But if these officers are now ceased from among them, as fome of them will acknowledge, then this anfwer must cease also; and the prophecy returns in its full force upon them; and why do they then any longer refift the power of it?

The same year that Evilmerodach was slain, died f Astyages, king of Media, and after him succeeded Cyaxares the second, his son, in the civil government of the kingdom, and Cyrus, his grandson, by his daughter Mandana in the military. Cyrus at Vol. I.

^a Jer. xxii. 30. b 2 Esdras v. 16.

Vide Notas Constantini L'empereur ad Benj. Itinerarium, p. 192, &c. d Vide Jacobi Altingi librum Shilo, lib. 1. c. 3. 13. 14. &c. Et Seldenum de Synedriis, lib. 2. c. 7. §. 5.

e Vide Buxtorfii Lexicon Rabbinicum, p. 1399. & Seldenum de Synedriis, lib. 2. c. 6.

f Cyropedia, lib. 1.

this time was a go years old, and Cy; xares b 41. And from this year, those who reckon to Cyrus a reign of 30 years, begin that computation. For Neriglissar, on his coming to the crown, c making great preparations for a war against the Medes, Cyaxares called Cyrus out of Persia to his assistance, and on his arrival with an army of 30,000 Perfians, Cyaxares made him general of the Medes also, and fent him with the joint forces of both nations to make war against the Babylonians. And from this time he was reckoned by all foreigners as king over both these nations; although, in reality the regal power was folly in Cyaxares, and Cyrus was no more than general of the confederate army under him. But, after his death, he fucceeded him in the kingdom of the Medes, as he did his father a little before in that of Persia; which, with the countries he had conquered, made up the Perfian empire, of which he was the founder and first monarch.

He was a very extraordinary person in the age in which he lived, for wisdom, valour, and virtue, and of a name samous in holy writ, not only for being d the restorer of the state of Israel, but especially in being there appointed for it by name many years before he was bern; which is an honour therein given to none, save only to him, and f Josiah, king of Judah. He was born (as hath been already taken notice of) on the same year in which Jehoiachin died. It is on all hands agreed, that his mother was Mandana, the daughter of Astyages, king of the Medes, and his father Cambyses a Persian.

But whether this Cambyles was king of that country, or only a private person, is not agreed. Herodotus, and those who follow him, allow him to have been no more than a private nobleman, of the family of Achamenes, one of the most antient in that country. But Kenophon's account makes him king of the Persians, but subject to the Medes. And not only in this particular, but also in most things else concerning this great prince, the relations of these two historians are very much different. But Herodotus's account of him containing narratives which are much more strange and surprising, and confequently more diverting and acceptable to the reader, most have chosen rather to follow him, than Xenophon, that have written after their times of this matter. Which humour was a Cicero, lib. 1. De Divinatione dicit de Cyro—Ad Septuagefimum pervenit cum quadrayinta annos natus regnare cop flet.

much

b For he was 62 when he began to reign in Battylon, after the death of Belfhazzar. Dan. v. 31. which being nine years before Cyrus's death (who lived 70 years), it must follow that Cyrus was then 61, and therefore when he was 40, Cyaxates must have been 41.

Cyropedia, lib. 1. d Ezra i. f If. xliv. 28, & xlv. 1. f r Kings xiii. 2.

much forwarded by Plato, in his a giving a character of Xenophen's hiftory of Cyrus (in which he was also followed by Tully), b as if therein, under the name of Cyrus, he rather drew a description of what a worthy and just prince ought to be, than gave us a true history of what that prince really was. It must be acknowledged, that Xenophon being a great commander, as well as a great philosopher, did graft many of his maxims of war and policy into that history, and to make it a vehicle for this, perchance was his whole defign in writing that book. But it doth not follow from hence, but that still the whole foundation and ground-plot of the work may be all true history. That he intended it for fuch, is plain; and that it was fo, its agreeableness with the holy writ doth abundantly verify. And the true reaion why he chose the life of Cyrus, before all others, for the purpose above mentioned, seemeth to be no other, but that he found the true history of that excellent and gallant prince to be above all others the fittest for those maxims of right policy and true princely virtue to correspond with, which he grafted upon it. And therefore, bating the military and political reflections, the descants, discourses, and speeches interspersed in that work, which must be acknowledged to have been all of Xenophon's addition, the remaining bare matters of fact I take to have been related by that author as the true history of Cyrus. And thus far I think him to have been an historian of much better credit in this matter than Herodotus. For Herodotus having travelled through Egypt, Syria, and feveral other countries, in order to the writing of his history, did as travellers use to do, that is, put down all relations upon truft, as he met with them, and no doubt he was imposed on in many of them. But Xenophon was a man of another character, c who wrote all things with great judgement, and due confideration; and having lived in the court of Cyrus the younger, a descendant of the Cyrus whom we now speak of, had opportunities of being better informed of what he wrote of this great prince, than Herodotus was; and confining himself to this argument only, no coubt, he examined all matters relating to it more thoroughly, and gave a more accurate and exact account of them; than could be expected from the other, who wrote of all things at large, as they came in his way. And for these reasons, in all things relating to this prince, I have chosen to follow Xenophon, rather than any of those who differ from him.

For the first d 12 years of his life, Cyrus lived in Persia.

h De Legibus, lib. 3.
Ep. 1. ad Quintum fratrem;
d Cyropedia, lib. 1.

with his father, and was there educated, after the Persian manner, in hardship and toil, and all such exercises as would best tend to fit him for the fatigues of war, in which he exceeded all his contemporaries. But here it must be taken notice of. that the name of Persia did then extend only to one province of that large country, which hath been fince fo called: for then the whole nation of the Persians could number no more than a 120,000 men. But afterwards, when, by the wisdom and valour of Cyrus, they had obtained the empire of the East, the name of Persia became enlarged with their fortunes; and it thenceforth took in all that vast tract, which is extended east and west from the river Indus to the Tygris, and north and fouth from the Caspian sea to the ocean; and so much that name comprehends even to this day. After Cyrus was twelve years old, he was fent for into Media by Astyages, his grandfather, with whom he continued five years: and there, by the fweetness of his temper, his generous behaviour, and his constant endeavour to do good offices with his grandfather for all he could, he did so win the hearts of the Medes to him, and gained fuch an interest among them, as did afterwards turn very much to his advantage, for the winning of that empire which he erected. In the 16th year of his age, Evilmerodach, the fon of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon and Aslyria, being abroad on an hunting expedition, a little before his marriage, for a flew of his bravery, made an inroad into the territories of the Medes, which drew out b Astyages with his forces to oppose him. On which occasion, Cyrus, accompanying his grandfather, then first entered the school of war; in which he behaved himfelf fo well, that the victory which was at that time gained over the Affyrians was chiefly owing to his valour. The next year after, he went home to his father into Persia, and there continued till the 40th year of his life; at which time he was called forth to the afliftance of his uncle Cyaxares, on the occasion which I have mentioned. Hereon he marched out of Perfia with his army, and behaved himfelf fo wifely, that, from this fmall beginning, in 20 years time, he made himself master of the greatest empire that had ever been erested in the East to that time, and established it with such wildom, that, upon the fivength of this foundation only, it flood above 200 years, notwithstanding what was done by his success.

iois

^a Cyropedia, lib. 1.

b From hence it may be inferred, that Evilmerodach was not the fon of Nebuchadnezzar by Amyitis, the daughter of Adyages, but by fome other wife, it not being likely that the grandfather and grandfon would thus engage in war against each other.

fors (the worst race of men that ever governed an empire) through all that time to overthrow it.

Nerigliflar, upon intelligence that Cyrus was come with fo great an army to the affiftance of the Medes, farther to strengthen himself against them, a fent ambassadors to the Lydians, Phrygians, Carians, Cappadocians, Cilicians, Paphlagonians, and other neighbouring nations, to call them to his aid; and, by reprefenting to them the strength of the enemy, and the necessity of maintaining the balance of power against them, for the common good of Asia, drew them all into confederacy with him for the enfuing war. Whereon the king of Armenia, who had hitherto lived in subjection to the Medes, looking on them as ready to be swallowed up by so formidable a confederacy against them, thought this a fit time for the recovering of his liberty, and therefore b refused any longer to pay his tribute, or fend his quota of auxiliaries for the war, on their being required of him; which being a matter that might be of dangerous consequence to the Medes, in the example it might give to other dependent states to do the same, Cyrus thought it necessary to crush this revolt with the utmost expedition; and therefore, marching immediately with the best of his horfe, and covering his defign under the pretence of an hunting match, c entered Armenia, before there was any intelligence of his coming, and, having surprised the revolted king, took him and all his family prisoners; and, after this, having feized the hills towards Chaldea, and planted good forts and garrifons on them, for the fecuring of the country against the enemy on that fide, he came to new terms with the captive king; and, having received from him the tribute and auxiliaries which he demanded, he restored him again to his kingdom, and returned to the rest of his army in Media. This happened about the 3d year of the reign of Neriglissar, and the 32d after the destruction of Jerusalem.

After both parties had now been for three years together forming their alliances, and making their preparations for the war, in the 4th year of Neriglissar, An. 556. the confederates on both sides being all drawn together, both armies took the field, and it came to a sierce battle between them; in which Neriglissar being slain, the rest of the Assyrian army was put to the rout, and Cyrus had the victory. Cresus, king of Lydia, after the death of Neriglissar, as being in dignity next to him, took upon him the command

 \mathbf{H}

ο£

^a Cyropedia, lib. r.

^b Cyropedia, lib. 2.

Cyropedia, lib. 3. & 4.

of the vanquished army, and made as good a retreat with it as he could. But the next day following, Cyrus, pursuing after them, overtook them at a disadvantage, and put them to an absolute rout, taking their camp, and dispossessing them of all their baggage; which he effected chiefly by the affishance of the Hyrcanians, who had the night before revolted to him. Hereon Cræsus, taking his slight out of Asyria, made the best of his way into his own country. He, being aware of what might happen, had, the night before, sent away his women, and the best of his baggage; and therefore, in this respect, escaped much better than the rest of the consederates.

The death of Neriglissar was a great loss to the Babylonians; for he was a a very brave and excellent prince. The preparations which he made for the war shewed his wisdom, and his dying in it his valour. And there was nothing elfe wanting in him for his obtaining of better fuccess in it; and, therefore, that he had it not, was owing to nothing elfe, but that he had to deal with the predominant fortune of Cyrus, whom God had defigned for the empire of the East, and therefore nothing was to withstand him. But nothing made the loss of Neriglissar more appear, than the fucceeding of Laborofoarchod his ion in the kingdom after him: for he was b in every thing the reverse of his father, being given to all manner of wickedness, cruelty, and injustice, to which, on his advancement, to the throne he did let himself loose in the utmost excess, without any manner of reftraint whatfoever, as if the regal office, which he was now advanced to, were for nothing else but to give him a privilege of doing, without controul, all the vile and flagitious things that he pleased. Two acts of his tyrannical violence towards two of his principal nobility, Gobrias and Gadates, are particularly mentioned. The only fon of the former he flew at an hunting, to which he had invited him, for no other reason, but that he had thrown his dart with fuccess at a wild beast, when he himfelf had miffed it. And the other he caused to be castrated, only pecause one of his concubines had commended him for an hand-These wrongs done those two noblemen drove hem, with the provinces which they governed, into a revolt to Cyrus; and the whole state of the Babylonish empire suffered by it: for Cyrus, encouraged hereby, c penetrated into the very heart of the enemy's country, first taking possession of the province, and garrifoning the caftles of Gobrias, and afterward doing the fame in the province and castles of Gadates. The Assyvian king was before him in the latter, to be revenged on Gadates dates for his revolt. But Cyrus, on his coming, having put him to the rout, and flain a great number of his men, forced him again to retreat to Babylon. After Cyrus had thus fpent the fummer in ravaging the whole country, and twice shewn himfelf before the walls of Babylon, to provoke the enemy to battle, at the end of the year, he led back his army again towards Media; and, ending the campaign with the taking of three fortresses on the frontiers, there entered into winter-quarters, and fent for Cyaxares, to come thither to him, that they might consult together about the future operations of the war.

As foon as Cyrus was retreated, Laborofoarched, being now freed from the tear of the enemy, gave himself a thorough loose to all the flagitious inclinations that were predominant in him; which carried him into fo many wicked and unjust actions, like those, which Gobrias and Gadates had suffered from him, that, being no longer tolerable, his a own people conspired against him, and flew him, after he had reigned only nine months. He is not named in the canon of Ptolemy; for it is the method of that canon, to ascribe all the year to him that was king in the beginning of it, how foon foever he died after, and not to reckon the reign of the successor, but from the first day of the year enfuing; and therefore, if any king reigned in the interim, and did not live to the beginning of the next year, his name was not put into the canon at all. And this was the case of Laborosoarchod: for Neriglissar his father being slain in battle, in the beginning of the fpring, the nine months of his fon's reign ended before the next year began: and therefore the whole of that year is reckoned to the last of Neriglissar, and the beginning of the next belonged to his fucceflor: and this was the reason that he is not at all mentioned in that canon.

After him succeeded b-Nabonadius, and reigned seventeen years. Calls him Nabonnedus, Megaithenes Nabonnidochus, Herodotus Cabynetus, and Josephus Naboandelus, who, he saith, is the same with Belshazzar. And there is as great a difference among writers, what he was, as well as what he was called. Some will have him to be of the royal blood of Nebuchadnezzar, and bothers no way at all related to him. And

^a Berofus apud Josephum contra Apienem, lib. 1: Megasthenes apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. 9. Josephus Antiq. lib. 10. c. 12.

b Canon Ptolemæi.

c Apud Josephum contra Apiorem, lib. 1.

d Apud Eufeb. Præp. Evang, lib. 9. e Herodotus, lib. 1.

f Antiq. lib. 10. c. 11.

Josephus, ibid.

Megasthenes, ibid.

fome fay a he was a Babylonian, and others b that he was of the feed of the Medes. And of those who allow him to have been of the royal family of Nebuchadnezzar, fome will have it that he was his fon, and others, that he was his grandfon. For the clearing of this matter, these following particulars are to be taken notice of: 1/t, That he is on all hands agreed to have been t e last of the Babylonish kings. 2dly, That therefore he must have been the same who in scripture is called Belshazzar: for, immediately after the death of Belshazzar, the kingdom was given to the Medes and Perfians (D.n. v. 28 30. 31.). 3dly, That he was of the feed of Nebuchadnezzar; for he is called his fon, and Nebuchadnezzar is faid to be his father, in feveral places of the fame 5th chapter of Daniel; and in the 2d book of Chronicles (chap. xxxvi. 20.), it is faid that Nebuchadnezzar and his children, or offspring, reigned at Babylon till the kingdom of Persia. 4thly, That the nations of the East were to serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his fon, and his fon's fon, according to the prophecy of jeremiah (chap. xxvii. 7.); and therefore he must have had a fon, and a fon's fon, fuccessors to him in the throne of Babylon. sthly, That as Evilmerodach was his fon, fo none but Belshazzar, of all the kings that reigned after him at Babylon, could be his fon's fon; for Neriglissar was only his daughter's husband, and Laborosoarchod was the son of Neriglissar; and therefore neither of them was either fon, or fon's fon, to Nebuchadnezzar. 6thly, That this last king of Babylon is faid, by 'Herodotus, to be fon to the great queen Nitocris; and therefore the must have been the wife of a king of Babylon to make her fo: and he could have been none other than Evilmerodach; for by that king of Babylon only could she have a son, that was son's son to Nebuchadnezzar. And therefore, putting all this together, it appears, that this Nabonadius, the last king of Babylon, was the same with him that in scripture is called Belshazzar; and that he was the fon of Evilmerodach, by Nitocris his queen, and fo fon's fon to Nebuchadnezzar. And that whereas he is called the fon of Nebuchadnezzar in the 5th chapter of Daniel, and Nebuchadnezzar is there called his father, this is to be understood in the large fense, wherein any ancestor upward is often called father, and any descendant downward for, according to the usual stile of scripture.

This new king came young to the crown; and, had he been wholly left to himfelf, the Babylonians would have gotten

² Berofus, ibid.

b Scaliger in notis ad Fragmenta veterum Græcorum felecta, et de emendatione temporum. No. 6. cap. De Regibus Babyloniis.

Merodotus, Fo. x

but little by the change: for he hath, in Zenophon, the character a of an impious prince; and it sufficiently appears, by what is said of him in Daniel, that he was so. But his mother, who was a woman b of great understanding and a masculine spirit, came in to their relief: for, while her son followed his pleasures, she took the main burden of the government upon her, and did all that could be done by human wisdom to preserve it. But God's appointed time for its fall approaching, it was beyond the power of any wisdom to prevent it.

On the coming of Cyaxares to Cyrus's camp, and confultation thereon had between them concerning the future carrying on of the war, it was found, that, by ravaging and plundering the countries of the Babylonish empire, they did not at all enlarge their own; and therefore it was resolved to alter the method of the war for the future, and to apply themselves to the besieging of the fortresses, and the taking of their towns, that so they might make themselves masters of the country, and in this fort of war they employed themselves for the next seven years.

In the mean time d Nitocris did all that the could to fortify the country against them, and especially the city of Babylon; and therefore did fet herfelf diligently to perfect all the works that Nebuchadnezzar had left unfinished there, especially the walls of the city, and the banks of the river within it. By this last she fortified the city as much against the river by walls and gates, as it was against the land; and, had it been in both places equally guarded, it could never have been taken. And, moreover, while the river was turned for the finishing of these banks and walls, the caufed a wonderful vault or gallery to be made under the river, leading cross it from the old palace to the new, 12 feet high, and 15 feet wide, and having covered it over with a strong arch, and over that with a layer of bitumenfix feet thick, the turned the river again over it; for it is the nature of that butumen, to petrify when water comes over it, and grow as hard as stone; and thereby the vault or gallery under was preferved from having any of the water of the river to pierce through into it. The use this was intended for, was to preserve a communication between the two palaces, whereof one flood on . the one fide of the river, and the other on the other fide, that in case one of them were diffressed (for they were both fortresses ftrongly fortified), it a ight be relieved from the other; or, in case either were taken, there might be a way to retreat from it to the other. But all these cautions and provisions served in no

^a Cyropedia, lib. 7.

F Herodotus, lib. 1. Cyropedia, lib. 6.

d Herodotus, lib. 1.

e Herodotus, lib. 1. Diod. Sic. lib. 2. Philostratus, lib. 1. c. 18.

stead when the city was taken by furprise, because, in that hurry and confusion which men were then in, none of them were made use of.

In the first year of this king's reign, which was the 34th after the destruction of Jerusalem, Daniel had revealed unto him the vision of the sour monarchies, and of the kingdom of the Messiah that was to succeed aster them; which is at full related in the 7th chapter of Daniel. In the 3d year of King Belshazzar, Daniel faw the vision of the ram and the he-goat, whereby were fignified the An. 553. overthrow of the Persian empire by Alexander the Belfhaz. 3. Great, and the perfecution that was to be raifed against the Jews by Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria. This vision is at full related in the 8th chapter of Daniel; and it is there faid, that it was revealed unto him at Shushan, in the palace of the king of Babylon, while he attended there as a counfellor and minister of state about the king's business; which fhows, that Shushan, with the province of Elam, of which it was the metropolis, was then in the hands of the Babylonians. But, about three years after, Abradates, viceroy or prince of Shushan, revolting to Cyrus, it was thenceforth joined to the empire of the Medes and Persians; and the Elamites came up with the Medes to befrege Babylon, according to the prophecy of Isaiah (ch. xxi. 2.); and Elam was again restored according, to the prophecy of Jeremiah (ch. xlix. 39.); for it recovered its liberty again under the Persians, which it had been deprived of

The Medes and Persians growing still upon the Babylonians, and Cyrus making great progress in his conquests, by taking fortresses, towns, and provinces, from them, to put a stop to this prevailing a power, the king of Babylon, about the 5th year of his reign, taking a great part of his treasure with him, goes into Lydia, to King Cræsus, his consederate, and, there by his assistance, framed a very formidable confederacy against the Medes and Persians; and, with his money, hiring a very numerous army of Egyptians, Greeks, Thracians, and all the nations of Lesler Asia, he appointed Cræsus to be their general, and fent him with them to invade Mesus and the statement of the statemen dia, and then returned again to Babylon.

under the Babylonians.

Cyrus, having full intelligence of all these proceedings from one of his considents, who, by his order, under the pretence of a deferter, had gone over to the enemy, made suitable preparations to withstand the storm, and, when all was ready, marched against against the enemy. By this time Cræsus a had passed over the river Halys, taken the city of Pteria, and in a manner deftroyed all the country thereabout. But, before he could pass any farther, Cyrus came up with him, and, having engaged him in battle, put all his numerous army to flight; whereon Cræsus returning to Sardis, the chief city of his kingdom, dufmiffed all his auxiliaries to their respective homes, ordering them to be again with him by the beginning of the enfuing fpring, and fent to all his allies for the raifing of more forces to be ready against the same time, for the carrying on of the next year's war; not thinking toat, in the interim, now winter being approaching, he should have any need of them. But Cyrus, pursuing the advantage of his victory, followed close after him into Lydia, and there came upon him just as he had difmiffed his auxiliaries. However, Croefus, getting together all his own forces, flood battle against him. But the Lydians being mostly horse, Cyrus brought his canels against them, whose smell the horses not being able to bear, they were all put into diforder by it; whereon the Lydians difmounting, fought on foot; but being foon overpowered, were forced to make their retreat to Sardis, where Cyrus immediately shut them up in a close fiege.

An. 548. Belfhaz. 8.

While he lay there, he b celebrated the funeral of Abradates and Panthea his wife. He was prince of Shushan under the Babylonians, and had revolted to Cyrus about two years before, as hath been already mentioned. His wife, a very beautiful woman, c had been taken prisoner by Cyrus in his first battle against the Babylonians. Cyrus having treated her kindly, and kept her chastely for her husband, the defense of this generosity drew over this prince to him; and he happening to be slain in this war, as he was sighting valiantly in his service, his wife, out of grief for his death, slew herself upon his dead body, and Cyrus took care to have them both honourably buried together, and a stately monument was erected over them near the river

Pactolus, where it remained many ages after.

Cræsus, being shut up in Sardis, essent to all his allies for succours; but Cyrus pressed the siege so vigorously, that he took the city before any of them could arrive to its relief, and Cræsus in it, whom he condemned to be burnt to death; and accordingly a great pile of wood was laid together, and he was placed on the top of it for the execution; in which extremity, calling to mind

⁴ Herodotus, lib. 1. Cyropedia, lib. 6.

b Cyropedia, lib. 7. Cyropedia, lib. 5.

Cyropedia, lib. 6.

^o Herodotus, lib. 1. Cyropedia, lib. 7.

this

the conference he formerly had with Solon, cried out with a great figh, three times, Solon, Solon, Solon. This Solon a was a wife Athenian, and the greatest philosopher of his time, who coming to Sardis on some occasion, Croesus, out of the vanity and pride of his mind, caufed all his riches, treasures, and stores, to be shewn unto him, expecting that, on his having feen them, he should have applauded his felicity, and pronounced him of all men the most happy herein; but, on his discourse with him, Solon plainly told him, that he could pronounce no man happy, as long as he lived, because no one could foresee what might happen unto him before his death. Of the truth of which Cræfus being now thoroughly convinced by his present calamity, this made him call upon the name of Solon; whereon Cyrus, fending to know what he meant by it, had the whole story related to him; which excited in him fuch a fense of the uncertainty of all human felicity, and fuch a compassion for Creesus, that he caused him to be taken down from the pile, just as fire had been put to it, and not only spared his life, but allowed him a very honourable subfishence, and made use of him as one of his chief counsellors all his life after; and, at his death, recommended him to his fon Cambyles, as the perfon whose advice he would have him chiefly to follow. The taking of this city happened b in the first year of the 58th Olympiad, which was the 8th year of Belshazzar, and the 41st after the destruction of Jerusalem.

Cræsus being a very religious prince, according to the idolatrous superstition of those times, entered not on this war without having first consulted all his gods, and taken their advice about it; and he had two oracular answers given him from them which chiefly conduced to lead him into this unfortunate undertaking, that cost him the loss of his kingdom. The one of them was, that Cræsus should then only think himself in d danger, when a mule should reign over the Medes; and the other, that when he should pass over Halys, to make war upon the Medes, he should overthrow a great empire. The first, from the impossibility of the thing that ever a mule should be a king, made him argue that he was for ever safe. The second made him believe, that the empire that he should overthrow, on his passing over the river Halys, should be the empire of the Medes. And b Solinus, cap. 7. Eusebius in Chronico. Herodotus, lib. 1. Cyropedia, lib. 7.

² Plutarchus in vita Solonis, Herodotus, lib. r.

⁴ Nebuchadnezzar prophefied of the coming of Cyrus under the same appellation, telling the Babylonians, at the time of his death, that a Perfian mule should come and reduce them into servitude. So saith Megasthenes in Eusebius de Præp. Evang. lib. 9.

this chiefly encouraged him in this expedition, contrary to the advice of one of the wifest of his friends, who earnestly diffuaded him from it. But now all things having happened otherwise than these oracles had made him expect, he obtained leave of Cyrus to fend messengers to the temples of those gods who had thus misled him, to expostulate with them about it. The answers which he had hereto were, that Cyrus was the mule intended by the oracle; for that he was born of two different kinds of people, of the Persians by his father, and of the Medes by his mother, and was of the more noble kind by his mother. the empire which he was to overthrow, by his passing over Halys, was his own. By fuch false and fallacious oracles did those evil spirits, from whom they proceeded, delude mankind in those days; rendering their answers, when consulted, in such dubious and ambiguous terms, that whatfoever the event were, they might admit of an interpretation to agree with it.

After this Cyrus a continued fome time in Lesser Asia, till he had brought all the feveral nations which inhabited in it, from the Egean sea to the Euphrates, into thorough subjection to him. From hence he went into Syria and Arabia, and there did the fame thing; and then marched into the upper countries of Asia, and, having there also settled all things in a thorough obedience under his dominion, he again entered Affyria, and marched on towards Babylon, that being the only place of all the East which now held out against him: and, having overthrown Belshazzar in battle, he shut him up in Babylon and there besieged him. This happened in the ninth year after the taking of Sardis, and in the beginning of the fixteenth year of Belihazzar. But this fiege proved a very difficult work: for the walls were high and impregnable, the number of men within to defend them very great, and they were fully furnished with all forts of provisions for twenty years, and b the void ground within the walls was able both by till. age and pasturage to furnish them with much more. And therefore the inhabitants, thinking themselves secure in their walls and their stores, looked on the taking of the city by a siege as an impracticable thing; and therefore, from the top of their walls, fcoffed at Cyrus, and derided him for everything he did towards it. However he went on with the attempt; and first he drew a line of circumvallation round the city, making the ditch broad and deep, and by the help of the palm-trees, c which usually grow in that country to the height of 100 feet, he erected towers

^a Herodotus lib. 1. Cyropedia, lib. 7. b Vide Q. Curtium, lib. 5. c. 1. Cyropedia, lib. 7.

towers higher than the walls, thinking at first to have been able to take the place by affault; but finding little fuccess this way. he applied himself wholly to the starving of it into a surrender, reckoning that the more people there were within, the fooner the work would be done. But, that he might not over-fatigue his army, by detaining them all at this work, he divided all the forces of the empire into twelve parts, and appointed each its month to guard the trenches. But, after near two years had been wasted this way, and nothing effected, he at length lighted on a stratagem, which, with little difficulty, made him master of the place: for a understanding, that a great annual festival was to be kept at Babylon on a day approaching, and that it was usual for the Babylonians on that folem-Belihaz. 17. nity to fpend the whole night in revelling, drunkennels, and all manner of diforders, he thought this a proper time to surprise them; and, for the effecting of it, he had this device: He fent up a party of his men to the head of the canal leading to the great lake above described, with orders, at a time fet, to break down the great bank or dam, which was between the river and that canal, and to turn the whole current that way into the lake. In the interim, getting all his forces together, he posted one part of them at the place where the river ran into the city, and the other where it came out, with orders to enter the city that night by the channel of the river, as foon as they should find it fordable. And then, toward the evening, he opened the head of the trenches on both fides the river above the city, to let the water of it run into them. And, by this means, and the opening of the great dam, the river was so drained, that, by the middle of the night, it being then in a manner empty, both parties, according to their orders, entered the channel, the one having Gobrias, and the other Gadates, for their guides; and finding the gates leading down to the river, which used on all other nights to be shut, then all left open, through the neglect and diforder of that time of loofeness, they afcended through them into the city; and both parties being met at the palace, as had been concerted between them, they there furprifed the guards, and flew them all: and when, on the noise, some that were within opened the gates to know what it meant, they rushed in upon them and took the palace; where, finding the king with his fword drawn at the head of those who were at hand to affift him, they flew him valiantly highting for his life, and all those that were with him. After this, proclamation being made of life and fafety to all fuch as should bring in their arms, and of death to all that should refuse so to do, all quietly quietly yielded to the conquerors, and Cyrus, without any farther refistance, became master of the place; and this concluded all his conquests, after a war of 21 years; for fo long was it from his coming cut of Perlia with his army, for the affittance of Cyaxares, to his taking of Babylon; during all which time he lay abroad in the field, carrying on his conquests from place to place, till at length he had subdued all the East, from the Egean sea to the river Indus, and thereby erected the greatest empire that had ever been in Asia to that time; which work was owing as much to his wisdom as his valour, for he equally excelled in both. And he was also a person of that great candour and humanity to all men, that he made greater conquests by his courtefy, and his kind treatment of all he had to do with, than by his fword, whereby he did knit the hearts of all men to him; and in this foundation lay the greatest strength of his empire, when he first erected it.

^{*} Herodotus, lib. r. Cyropedia, lib. 7.

This account Herodotus and Zenophon both give of the taking of Babylon by Cyrus; and herein they exactly agree with the scripture. For Daniel a tells us, that Belshazzar made a great feast for a thousand of his lords, and for his wives, and for his concubines, and that in that very night he was flain, and Darius the Mede, that is, Cyaxares the uncle of Cyrus, took the kingdom; for Cyrus allowed him the title of all his conquests, as long as he lived. In this feast Belshazzar having impiously profaned the gold and filver veffels that were taken out of the temple of Jerufalem, in causing them to be brought into the banqueting-house, and there drinking out of them, he and his lords, and his wives, and his concubines, God did, in a very extraordinary and wonderful manner, express his wrath against him for the wickedness hereof; for he caused an hand to appear on the wall, and there write a sentence of immediate destruction against him for it. king faw the appearance of the hand that wrote it; for it was exactly over against the place where he sat. And therefore, being exceedingly affrighted and troubled at it, he commanded all his wife men, magicians, and aftrologers, to be immediately called for, that they might read the writing, and make known unto him the meaning of it. But b none of them being able to do it, the queen-mother, on her hearing of this wonderful thing, came into the banqueting-house, and acquainted the king of the great skill and ability of Daniel in such matters; whereon he being fent for, did read to the king the writing, and, boldly telling

a Daniel v.

b The reason why they could not read it was, because it was written in the old Hebrew letters, now called the Samaritan character, which the Babylonians knew nothing of.

ling him of his many iniquities and transgressions against the great God of heaven and earth, and particularly in profaning, at that banquet, the holy veffels, which had been confecrated to his fervice in his temple at Jerusalem, made him understand, that this hand-writing was a fentence from heaven against him for it, the interpretation of it being, that his kingdom was taken from him, and given to the Medes and Persians. And it seemeth to have been immediately upon it that the palace was taken, and Belshazzar flain; for a candles were lighted before the hand-writing appeared, fome time after this must be required for the calling of the wife-men, the magicians, and aftrologers, and fome time must be wasted in their trying in vain to read the writing. After that the queen-mother came from her apartment into the banqueting-house to direct the king to fend for Daniel, and then he was called for, perchance from some distant place. And by this time many hours of the night must have been spent; and therefore we may well suppose, that, by the time Daniel had interpreted the writing, the Perfians were got within the palace, and immediately excuted the contents of it, by flaying Belshazzar, and all his lords, that were with him. The queen, that entered the banqueting-house to direct the king to call for Daniel, could not be his wife; for all his wives, and concubines, the text tells us, fat with him at the feast; and therefore it must have been Nitocris the queen-mother. And she seemeth to have been there called the queen, by way of eminency, because she had the regency of the kingdom under her fon, which her great wisdom eminently qualified her for. And Belshazzar seemeth to have left this entirely to her management: for when Daniel was called in before him, he did b not know him, though he was one of the chief ministers of state that c did the king's business in his palace, but asked of him whether he were Daniel. Nitocris, who constantly employed him in the public affairs of the kingdom, knew him well, and therefore advised that he should be sent for on this occasion. This shews Belshazzar to have been a prince that wholly minded his pleafures, leaving all things elfe to others to be managed for him; which is a conduct too often followed by fuch princes who think kingdoms made for nothing elfe, but to ferve their pleasures, and gratify their lusts. And therefore that he held the crown 17 years, and against so potent an enemy as Cyrus, was wholly owing to the conduct of his mother, into whose hands the management of his affairs fell: for the was a lady of the greatest wildom of her time, and did the utmost that could be done to save the state of Babylon And therefore, her name was long after of that fame in those parts, that Herodotus speaks of her, as if she had been fovereign of the kingdom, in the fame manner as Semiramis is faid to have been, and attributes to her all those works about Babylon which a other authors ascribe to her son. For, although they were done in his reign, it was she that did them, and therefore she had the best title to the honour that was due for them; though, as hath been above hinted, the great lake, and the canal leading to it (which, though reckoned among the works of Nebuchadnezzar, must at least have been finished by her, according to Herodotus), how wifely foever they were contrived for the benefit both of the city and country, turned to the great damage of both; for Cyrus, draining the river by this lake and canal, by that means took the city. And when, by the breaking down of the banks at the head of the canal, the river was turned that way, no care being taken afterwards again to reduce it to its former channel, by repairing the breach, b all the country on that fide was overflown and drowned by it; and the current, by long running this way, at length making the breach fo wide, as to become irrepairable, unless by an expence as great as that whereby the bank was first built, a whole province was loft by it; and the current whichwent to Babylon afterwards grew fo shallow, as to be scarce fit for the smallest navigation, which was a further damage to that place. Alexander, who intended to have made Babylon the feat of his empire, endeavoured to remedy this mitchief, and did accordingly fet himfelf to build the bank anew, which was on the west side of it; but, when he had carried it on the length of four miles, he was stopped by some difficulties that he met with in the work from the nature of the foil, which possibly would have been overcome, had he lived; but his death, which happened a little after, put an end to this, as well as to all his other defigns. And, a while after, Babyton falling into decay, on the building of Seleucia in the neighbourhood, this work was never more thought of; but that country hath remained all bog and marsh ever fince. And no doubt this was one main reason which helped forward the defertion of that place, especially when they found a new city built in the neighbourhood, in a much better fituation.

² Daniel v. e. b Daniel v. 12. C Daniel viii. 27.

In the taking of Babylon ended the Babylonish empire, after it had continued from the beginning of the reign of Nabonaslar (who first founded it) 209 years. And here ended the power and pride of this great city, just 50 years after it had destroyed the city and temple of Jerusalem; and hereby were in a great measure accomplished the many prophecies which were by the prophets

Vol. 1. I Ifaiah

^{*} Berofus apud Joseph. contra Apionem, lib. x

⁵ Arianus de Expeditione Alexandri, lib 7.

Isaiah, Jeremiah, Habakkuk, and Daniel, delivered against it. And here it is to be observed, that, in reference to the present belieging, and taking of the place, it was particularly foretold by them, that it a should be shut up, and besieged by the Medes, Elamites, and Armenians; that the river b should be dried up; that the city should be taken in the time of a feast, while her princes and her wife men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men, were drunken; and that they should be thereon made to fleep a perpetual fleep, from which they should not awake. And so accordingly all this came to pass, Beishazzar, and all his thousand princes, who were drunk with him at the feast, having d been all slain by Cyrus's foldiers when they took the palace. And so also was it particularly foretold, by the prophet Isaiah (xiv.), that God would make the country of Baby-Ion a possession for the bittern and pools of water (v. 23.); which was accordingly fulfilled by the overflowing and drowning of it, on the breaking down of the great dam, in order to take the city; which I have above given an account of; and fo also that God would cut off from that city the fon and the grandfon (v. 22.), that is, the fon and grandfon of their great king Nebuchadnezzar; and they were accordingly both cut off by violent deaths in the flower of their age, Evilmerodach the fon before this time in the manner as hath been above related, and Belshazzar the grandfon in the prefent taking of Babylon; and hereby the sceptre of Babylon was broken, as was foretold by the same prophecy (v. 5.): for it did never after any more bear rule. Where I read the fon and the grandfon (ver. 22.), it is, I confess, in the English translation the fon and the nephew. But, in the 21st chapter of Genefis, ver. 23. the fame Hebrew word Neked is translated fon's fon, and so it ought to have been translated here; for this is the proper fignification of the word; which appears from the use of the fame word, Job xviii. 19.: for Bildad, there speaking of the wicked, and the curfe of God which shall be upon him, in the want of a posterity, expresseth it thus: Lo ninlo velo Neked, i. e. he shall have neither fon nor grandson; for nephew, in the Englith fignification of the word, whether brother's fon, or fifter's fon, cannot be within the meaning of the text, the context not admitting it.

An. 538. Darius the Mede 1. After the death of Belfhazzar, Darius the Mede is faid on teripture to have taken the kingdom: for Gyrus, as long as his uncle lived, allowed him a joint title with him in the empire, although it a H. xiii. 17. and xxi. 2. Jur li. 11.

b Jer. 1.38. and Ii. 36.

c Jer. II. 39. 57.

d Cyropedia, lib. 7.
CDaniel v. 31.

was all gained by his own valour, and, out of deference to him. yielded him the first place of honour in it. But the whole power of the army, and the chief conduct of all affairs being still in his hands, he only was looked on as the supreme governor of the empire, which he had erected; and therefore, there is no notice at all taken of Darius in the canon of Ptolemy, but, immediately after the death of Belfhazzar (who is there called Nabonadius), Cyrus is placed as the next fucceffor, as in truth and reality he was; the other having no more than the name and the shadow of the sovereignty, excepting only in Media, which was his own proper dominion.

There are a some who will have Darius the Median to have been Nabonadius, the last Babylonish king in the canon of Ptolemy. And their scheme is, that, after the death of Evilmerodach, Nerigliffar fucceeded only as guardian to Laborofoarchod his fon, who was next heir in right of his mother, she having been daughter to Nebuchadnezzar; and that Laborofoarchod was the Belihazzar of the fcriptures, who was flain in the night of the impious festival, not by Cyrus (fay they), but by a conspiracy of his own people: that the scriptures attribute to him the whole four years of Belfhazzar, which the canon of Ptolemy doth to Nerigliffar, (or Nericaffolaffar, as he is there called), because Nerigliffar reigned only as guardian for him; and that hence it is, that we hear of the first and the third year of Belshazzar, b in Daniel, though Laborosoarchod reigned alone, after his father's death, only nine months: that, after his death, the Babylonians made choice of Nabonadius, who was no way of kin to the family of Nebuchadnezzar, but a Median by descent; and that for this reason only is he called Darius the Median in scripture. As to what they say of Nabonadius's not being of kin to the family of Nebuchadnezzar, it must be confessed, that the fragments of Megasthenes c may give them some authority for it: but as for all the rest, it hath no other foundation but the imagination of them that fay it. And the whole is contrary to scripture: for, 1st, The hand-writing on the wall told Belshazzar, that his kingdom should be divided, or rent from him, and be given to the d Medes and Perfians; and immediately after e the facred text tells us, that Belihazzar was flain that night, and Darius the Median took tie kingdom, who could be none other than Cyaxares, king of Media, who, in conjunction with Cyrus, the Perfian, conquered Babylon. 2dly, Therefore elmazzar a Scalizer, Calvifius, and others.

b Daniel vii. 1. &. viii. 1.
2 Apud Euseb. Præp. Evang lib. 3.

d Dan. v. 28.

Dan. v. 39 333

thazzar must have been the last Babylonish king, and consequently the Nabonadius of Ptolemy. 3dly, This last king was not a stranger to the family of Nebuchadnezzar; for the sacred text makes him a his descendant. 4thly, Darius is said to have governed the kingdom by the laws b of the Medes and Perlians; which cannot be supposed, till after the Medes and Persians had conquered that kingdom. Had this Darius been Nabonadius the Babylonish king, he would certainly have governed by the Babylonish laws, and not by the laws of his enemies, the Medes and Perfians, who were in hostility against him all his reign, and fought his ruin. 5thly, Darius is faid to have divided his empire into c 120 provinces, which could not have been true of the Babylonish empire, that never having been large enough for it. But it must be understood of the Persian empire only, which was vaftly larger. And afterwards, on the conquest of Egypt by Cambyfes, and of Thrace and India by Darius Hyftafpis, it had feven other provinces added to its former number; and therefore, in the time of Esther, it consisted of 127 provinces. And this having been the division of the Persian empire at that time, it sufficiently proves the former to have been of the same empire alfo: for if the Persian empire from India to Ethiopia contained but 127 provinces, the empire of Babylon alone, which was not the feventh part of the other, could not contain 120. The testimony which Scaliger brings to prove Nabonadius to have been a Mede by descent, and by election made king of Babylon, is very abfurd. In the prophecy of Nebuchadnezzar, delivered to the Babylonians a little before his death, concerning their future fubication to the Perfians, which is preserved in the fragments of Megasthenes, there are these words: d 'A Persian mule shall come, who, by the help of your own gods fighting for him, thall bring flavery upon you, whose affistant, or fellow-causer herein, shall be the Mede.' By which Mede is plainly meant Cyarares, king of Media, who was confederate with Cyrus in the war, wherein Babylon was conquered. But Scaliger faith it was Nabonadius; and hence proves that he was a Mede, and quotes this place in Megathhenes for it. If you afk-him, why he faith this, his answer is, that the person, who is in that prophecy faid to be the affiltant of Cyrus, and fellow-caufer with him in bringing fervitude upon Babylon, must be Nabonadius, because he was an affiltant and fellow-causer with him herein in being beaten and conquered by him. This argument needs no answer, it is fufficiently refuted by being related. And therefore Isaac Vosilius

^a Daniel v. 11. 13. 13. 22. ^b Daniel vi. 8. 15.

^c Daniel vi. 1.

d Apud Euseb. Præp. Evan. lib. 94

well observes, that the arguments which Scaliger brings for this are indigna Scaligero, i. e. unworthy of Scaliger. Chro-nologia Sacra, p. 144.

After Cyrus had fettled his affairs at Babylon, a he went into Persia, to make a visit to his father and mother, they being both yet living; and, on his return through Media, he there married the daughter of Cyaxares, having with her for her dowry the kingdom of Media, in reversion after her father's death; for the was his only child: and then with his new wife he went back to Babylon. And Cyaxares, being earnestly invited by him thither, accompanied him in the journey. On their arrival at Babylon, they there took counfel, in concert together, for the fettling of the whole empire; and, having divided it into the 120 provinces which I have before spoken of, they c distributed the government of them among those that had born with Cyrus the chief burden of the war, and best merited from him in it. Over these were appointed d three presidents, who, constantly residing at court, were to receive from them, from time to time, an account of all particulars relating to their respective government, and again remit to them the king's orders concerning them. And therefore, in these three, as the chief ministers of the king, was intrusted the superintendency and main government of the whole empire. And of them Daniel was made the first. To which preference, not only his great wifdom (which was of eminent fame all over the East), but also his seniority, and long experience in affairs, gave him the justest title: for he had now, from the fecond year of Nebuchadnezzar, been employed full 65 years as a prime minister of state under the kings of Babylon. However, this station advancing him to be the next person to the king in the whole empire, it stirred up so great an envy against him among the other courtiers, that they laid that fnare for him, which cast him into the lions den. But he being there delivered by a miracle from all harm, this malicious contrivance ended in the destruction of its authors: and Daniel being thenceforth immoveably fettled in the favour of Darius and Cyrus, e he prospered greatly in their time, as long as he lived.

In the first year of Darius, Daniel computing, that the seventy years of Judah's captivity, which were prophessed of by the prophet Jeremiah, were now drawing to an end, f carnessly prayed unto God, that he would remember his people, and grant restoration to Jerusalem, and make his sace again to shine upon the holy city, and his sanctuary, which he had placed there.

Whereon,

² Cyropedia, lib 3.

b Daniel vi. 1.

Cyropedia, lib. 8.

d Daniel vi. 2. Daniel vi. 28.

f Daniel ix.

Whereon, in a vision, he had affurance given him by the angel Gabriel, not only of the deliverance of Judah from their temporal captivity, under the Babylonians, but also of a much greater redemption, which God would give his church in his deliverance of them from their spiritual captivity under sin and Satan, to be accomplished at the end of 70 weeks, after the going forth of the commandment to rebuild Jerusalem, that is, at the end of 490 years. For, taking each day for an year, according as is usual in the prophetic stile of scripture, so many years 70 weeks of years will amount to, which is the clearest prophecy of the coming of the Meshah that we have in the Old Testament: for it determines it to the very time, on which he accordingly came, and by his death and passion, and resurrection from the dead, completed for us the great work of our falvation.

Cyrus, immediately on his return to Babylon, had issued out his orders a for all his forces to come thither to him, which, at a general muster, he found to be 120,000 horse, 2000 sithed chariots, and 600,000 foot. Of these having distributed into garrisons as many as were necessary for the desence of the several parts of the empire, he marched with therest in an expedition into Syria, where he settled all those parts of the empire; reducing all under him as far as the Red sea, and the confines of Ethiopia. In the interim b Cyaxares (whom the scriptures call Darius the Median) staid at Babylon, and there governed the affures of the empire, and during that time happened what hath been above related concerning Daniel's being cast into the lion's den, and his miraculous deliverance from it.

And, about the fame time, feem to have been coined those famous pieces of gold called Darics of which, by reason of their fineness, were for several ages preserved before all other coin throughout all the East: for we are told that the author of this coin was of not Darius Hystaspis, as some have imagined, but an ancienter Darius. But there is no ancienter Darius mentioned to have reigned in the East, excepting only this Darius, whom the scripture calls Darius the Median. And therefore it is most likely, that he was the author of this coin, and that, during the two years that he reigned at Babylon, while Cyrus was absent from thence on his Syrian, Egyptian, and other expeditions, he caused it to be made there, out of the vast quantity of gold, which had been brought thither into the treasury, as the spoils of the war which he and Cyrus had been so long engaged in;

b Daniel v. 31.
 Herodotus, lib. 4. Plutarchus in Artaxerxe.

^a Cyropedia, lib. 8.

d Harpocration. Scholiaftes Ariflophanis ad Ecclef. p. 741. 742. Suidas fub voce Augustis.

from whence it became dispersed all over the East, and also into Greace, where it was of great reputation. According a to Dr Bernard, it weighed two grains more than one of our guineas; but the fineness added much more to its value; for it was in a manner all of pure gold, having none or at least very little alloy in it; and therefore may be well reckoned, as the proportion of gold and filver now flands with us in respect to each other, to be worth 25 shillings of our money. In those b parts of scripture which were written after the Babylonish captivity, these pieces are mentioned by the name of Adarkonim, and in the Talmudifts by the name of c Darkonoth, both from the Greek Augenol, i. e. Daries. And it is to be observed, that all those pieces of gold, which were afterwards coined of the fame weight and value by the succeeding kings, not only of the Persian but also of the Macedonian race, were all called Darics, from the Darius that was the first author of them. And these were either whole Darics or half Darics, as with us there are guineas and half guineas.

But, about two years after, Cyaxares dying, and Cambyses being also dead in Persia, d Cyrus returned, and took on him the whole government of the empire; over which he reigned feven years. His reign is reckoned, from his first coming out of Persia, with an army for the affishance of Cyaxares, to his death, to have been 30 years; from the taking of Babylon nine years, and from his being fole monarch of the whole empire, after the death of Cyaxares and Cambyles, feven years. Tully e reckons by the first account, f Ptolemy by the second, and g Xenophon by the third. And the first of these seven years, is that first year of Cyrus mentioned in the first verse of the book of Ezra, wherein an end was put to the captivity of Judah, and a licence given them, by a public decree of the king's, again to return into their own country. The feventy years, which Jeremiah had prophesied should be the continuance of this captivity, were now just expired: for it began a year and two months before the death of Nabopollassar, after that Nebuchadnezzar reigned 43 years, Evilmerodach two years, Neriglissar four years, Belshazzar 17 years, and Darius the Median two years; which being all put together, make just 69 years and two months;

a De Ponderibus et Mensuris Antiquis, p. 171.

b I Chron. xxix. 7. and Ezra viii. 27.

^c Vide Buxtorfii Lexicon Rabinicum, p. 577. d Cyropedia, lib 8.

e De Divinatione, lib. 1.

f In Canone.

g Cyrop. lib. 8. Where Xenophon faith, that Cyrus reigned after the drath of Cyaxares feven years.

and, if you add hereto ten months more to complete the faid 70 years, it will carry down the end of them exactly into the same month, in the first year of Cyrus, in which it began in the last fave one of Nabopollastar, i.e. in the 9th month of the Jewish year, which is the November of ours. For in that month Nebuchadnezzar first took Jerusalem, and carried great numbers of the people into captivity, as hath been before related. And that their release from it happened also in the same month may be thus inferred from scripture. The first time the Jews are found at Jerusalem after their return, was in their Nisan, i. e. in our April, as will hereafter be shewn. If you allow them four months for their march thither from Babylon (which was the time a in which Ezra performed the like march), the beginning of that march will fall in the middle of the December preceding. And if you allow a month's time after the decree of release for their preparing for that journey, it will fix the end of the faid captivity, which they were then released from, exactly in the middle of the month of November, in the first year of Cyrus; which was the very time on which it began, just 70 years before. And that this first of Cyrus is not to be reckoned, with Pto-Jemy, from the taking of Babylon, and the death of Belshazzar, but with Zenophon, from the death of Darius the Mede, and the succession of Cyrus into the government of the whole empire, appears from hence, that this last is plainly the scripture reckoning: for therein, after the taking of Babylon, and the death of Belfhazzar, Darius the Mede b is named in the fuccession before Cyrus the Persian, and the years of the reign of Cyrus are not there reckoned, till the years of the reign of Darius had ceased; and therefore, according to scripture, the first of Cyrus cannot be till after the death of Darius.

There can be no doubt, but that this decree in favour of the Jews was obtained by Daniel. When Cyrus first came into Babylon, on his taking the city, he found him there an old minister of state, famed for his great wisdom all over the East, and long experienced in the management of the public affairs of the government; and such counsellors wise kings always seek for and, moreover, his late reading of the wonderful hand-writing on the well, which had puzzled all the wise men of Babylon besides, and the event which happened immediately after, exactly agreeable to his interpretation, had made a very great and fresh addition to his reputation; and therefore, on Cyrus's having made himself master of the city, he was soon called for, as a person that was best able to advise and direct about the fettling of the government

^a Ezra vii. 9.

t Daniel - - - 2

Compare Daienlix, r. with the roth chap, ver, 1, verament on this revolution, and was confulted with in all the measures taken herein. On which occasion, he so well approved himself, that afterwards, on the settling of the government of the whole empire, he was made first superintendant, or prime minister of state, over all the provinces of it, as hath been already shewn; and when Cyrus returned from his Syrian expedition again to Babylon, he found a new addition to his fame, from his miraculous deliverance from the lions den. All which put together gave fufficient reason for that wife and excellent prince to have him in the highest esteem; and therefore it is said. that a he prospered under him, as he did under Darius the Median, with whom, it appears, he was in the highest favour and esteem. And fince he had been so earnest with God in prayer for the restoration of his people, as we find in the 9th chapter of Daniel, it is not to be thought, that he was backward in his intercessions for it with the king, especially when he was in so great favour, and of so great authority with him. And, to induce him the readier to grant his request, he shewed him the prophecies of the prophet Ifaiah, b which spake of him by name 150 years before he was born, as one whom God had defigned to be a great conqueror, and king over many nations, and the restorer of his people, in causing the temple to be built, and the land of Judah and the city of Jerusalem to be again dwelt in by its former inhabitants. That Cyrus had seen and read these prophecies, c Josephus tell us; and it is plain from scripture that he did so; for they are recited d in his decree in Ezra for the rebuilding of the temple. And who was there that fhould flew them unto him, but Daniel, who, in the flation that he was in, had conftant access unto him, and of all men living had it most at heart to see these prophecies fulfilled, in the reftoration of Sion? Besides Cyrus, in his late expedition into Syria and Palestine, having seen so large and good a country as that of Judea lie wholly defolate, might justly be moved with a defire of having it again inhabited; for the ftrength and riches of every empire being chiefly in the number of its subjects, no wife prince would ever defire that any part of his dominions should lie unpeopled. And who could be more proper again to plant the desolated country of Judea than its former inhabitants? They were first carried out of Judea by Nebuchadnezzar to people and strengthen Babylon; and perchance under this government of the Persians, to which the Babylonians were never we'll affected, the weakening and dispropling of Babylon might be as firong a reason for their being

² Dan. i. 21. & vi. 28.

b If. xliv. 28. & xlv. 1.

E Lib. 11. c. 1.

d Ezra i. 2.

being fent back again into their own country. But whatfoever fecond causes worked to it, God's over-ruling power, which turneth the hearts of princes which way he pleaseth, brought it to pass, that, in the first year of Cyrus's monarchy over the East, he issued out his royal decree for the rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem, and the return of the Jews again into their own country. And hereon the state of Judah and Jerusalem began to be restored; of which an account will be given in the next book.

THE

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT CONNECTED.

IN

THE HISTORY

OF

THE JEWS AND NEIGHBOURING NATIONS.

FROM

The Declenfion of the Kingdoms of ISRAEL and JUDAH. to the Time of CHRIST.

BOOK III.

YRUS a having iffued out his decree for the refloring of the Jews unto their own land, and the rebuild-An. 536. ing of the temple at Jerusalem, they gathered toge-Cyrus 1. ther out of the feveral parts of the kingdom of Babylon, to the number of 42,360 persons, with their fervants, which amounted to 7337 more.

Their chief leaders were b Zerubbabel, the fon of Salathiel, the fon of Jehoiachin, or Jeconias, king of Judah, and Jeshua, the fon of Jozadak, the high priest. Zerubbabel (whose Babylonish name was c Sheshbazzar) was made d governor of the land. under the title of Tirshatha, by commission from Cyrus. But Jeshua was high priest by lineal descent from the pontifical family; for ehe was the fon of Jozadak, who was the fon of Seraiah, ² Ezra i. & ii.

b Ezra ii. 2.

Ezra i. 8. 11.

d Ezra v. 14.

^{° 1} Chron, vi. 14. 15.

raiah, that was high priest when Jerusalem was destroyed, and the temple burnt by the Chaldeans. Seraiah, being then taken prisoner by Nebuzaradan, and carried to Nebuchadnezzar to Riblah in Syria, was a then put to death by him: but Jozadak, his fon being spared as to his life, b was only with the rest led captive to Babylon, where he died before the decree of reftoration came forth; and therefore the office of high priest was then in Joshua his son, and under c that title he is named, next Zerubbabel, among the first of those that returned. were d Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reelaia, Mordecai, Billham, Mispar, Bigvai, Rehum, and Baanah, who were the prime leaders of the people, and the chief assistants to Zerubbabel, in the refettling of them again in their own land, and are by the Jewish writers reckoned the chief men of the great fynagogue; fo they call the convention of elders which, they fay, fat at Jerufalem after the return of the Jews, and did there again re-establish all their affairs both as to church and thate, of which they speak great things, as shall hereafter be shewn. But it is to be obferved, that the Nehemiah and Mordecai above mentioned, were not the Nehemiah and Mordecai of whom there is so much faid in the books of Nehemiah and Esther, but quite different persons who bore the same name.

At the same time that Cyrus issued out his decree for the rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem, he cordered all the vessels to be restored which had been taken from thence. Nebuchadnezzar, on the burning of the former temple, had brought them to Babylon, and placed them there in the temple of Bel his god. From thence they were, according to Cyrus's order, by Mithredath, the king's treasurer, delivered to Zerubbabel, who carried them back again to Jerusalem. All the vessels of gold and filver that were at this time restored were 5400; the remainder was brought back by Ezra, in the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, many years after.

And not only those of Judah and Benjamin, but several also of the other tribes, took the benefit of this decree to return again into their own land: for f some of them who were carried away by Tiglath-Pileser, Salmanezer, and Esarhaddon, still retained the true worship of God in a strange land, and did not go into the idolatrous usages and impieties of the heathens, among whom they were dispersed, but joined themselves to the Jews, when, by a like captivity, they were brought into the same parts:

a 2 Kings xxv. 18.

h r Chron. vi. 15. Ezra ii. 2. iii. 2. Hag. i. 12. and d Ezra ii. 2. Neh. vii. 7.

Ezra i. 7.---11. f Tobit i. 11. 12. & xiv. 9.

parts; and some, after all the Affyrian captivities, were still left. in the land. For we find some of them still there in the time of a Josiah, and they suffered the Babylonish captivity, as well as the Jews, till at length they were wholly carried away in the last of them by Nebuzaradan, in the b 23d year of Nebuchadnezzar. And many of them had long before c left their tribes for their religion, and, incorporating themselves with their brethren of Judah and Benjamin, dwelt in their cities, and there fell into the same calamity with them in their captivity under the Babylonians. And of all these a great number took the advantage of this decree again to return and dwell in their own cities; for both Cyrus's decree, as well as that of Artaxerxes, extended to all the house of Israel. The decree of Artaxerxes d is, by the name, to all the people of Ifrael, and that of Cyrus e is to all the people of the God of Ifrael, that is, as appears by the text, to all those that worshipped God at Ierusalem, which must be understood of the people of Israel, as well as of Judah; for that temple was built for both. and both had an equal right to worship God there. And therefore Ezra, when he returned, in the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, f fent a copy of the king's decree, whereby that favour was granted him through all Media, where the ten tribes were in captivity, as well as through all Chaldea and Aflyria, where the Jews were in captivity; which plainly implies, that both of them were included in that decree, and that being a renewal of the decree of Cyrus, both must be understood of the same extent. And we are told in scripture, that, after the captivity, g fome of the children of Ephraim and Manasseh dwelt in Jerusalem, as well as those of Judah and Benjamin. And it appears from feveral places h in the New Testament, that some of all the tribes were still in being among the Jews, even to the time of their last dispersion on the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, though then all were comprehended under the name of Jews, which, after the Babylonish captivity, became the general name of the whole nation, as that of Ifraelites was before. And this being premifed, it folves the difficulty which arifeth from the difference that is between the general number, and the particulars of those that returned upon Cyrus's decree. For the general number, both in Ezra and Nehemiah, is faid to be 42,360; but the particulars, as a 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9. & xxxv. 18.

b Jer. lii. 30.

c 2 Chron. xi. 16. xv. 9. & xxxi.6.

d Ezra vii. 13.

Ezra i. 3.

f Joseph. Antig. lib. rr. c. 5.

^{5 1} Chron. ix. 3.

h Luke ii. 36. James i. r. Asla reckoned up in their feveral families in Ezra, amount only to 29,818, and in Nehemiah to 31,031. The meaning of which is, they are only the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, that are reckoned by their families in both these places, a the rest being of the other tribes of Ifrael, are numbered only in the grofs fum, and this is that which makes the grofs fum fo much exceed the particulars in both the computations. But how it comes to pais, that the particulars in Ezra differ from the particulars in Nehemiah, fince there are feveral ways how this may be accounted for, and, we can only conjecture which of them may be the right, I shall not take upon me to determine.

XXVI. 7.

Of the 24 courses of the priests that were carried away to Babylon, only b four returned, and they were the courses of Jedaiah, Immer, Pashur, and Harim, which made up the number of 4289 persons. The rest either tarried behind, or were extinct. However, the old number of the courses, as established by King David, were flill kept up. For, of the four courfes that returned, c each subdivided themselves into fix, and the new courses taking the names of those that were wanting, still kept up the old titles; and hence it is, that after this Mattathias is faid to have been of the d course of Joarib, and Zacharias, of the course of Abia, though neither of these courses were of the number of those that returned. For the new courses took the names of the old ones, though they were not descended from them, and so they were continued by the same names under the second temple, as they had been under the first, only the fifth course, though of the number of these that returned, changed its name, and for that of Malchijah, under which it was first established, took the name of Pashur, that is, the name of the son, instead of that of the father; for, f Pashur was the son of Malchijah. It is a common faying among the Jews, that they were g only the bran, that is, the dregs of the people, that returned to Jerusalem after the end of the captivity, and that all the fine flower staid behind at Babylon. It is most certain, that, notwithstanding the feveral decrees that had been granted by the kings of Persia for the return of the Jews into their own land, there were a great many that waved taking the advantage of them, and continued ftill in Chaldea, Affyria, and other Eastern provinces, where they had been carried; and it is most likely, that they were of the best and richest of the nation that did

^a Seder Olam Rabba, c. 29.

⁶ Ezra ii. 36-39.

Talmud. Hierofol, in Taanith,

d 3 Mac. ii. 1.

Luke i. s.

f r Chron. ix. 12. Nehem. xi. 12.

g Talmud Bab, in Kiddushim?

fo: for, when they had gotten houses and lands in those parts. it cannot be supposed, that such would be very forward to leave good fettlements to new-plant a country that had lain many years defolate. But of what fort foever they were, it is certain a great many staid behind, and never again returned into their own country. And if we may guess at their number, by the family of Aaron, they wust have been many more than those who settled again in Judea; for of the 24 courses of the fons of Aaron, which were carried away, we find only four among those that returned, as hath been already taken notice of; and hereby it came to pass, that, during all the time of the second temple, and for a great many ages after, the number of the Jews in Chaldea, Aflyria, and Persia, grew to be so very great, that they were all along thought to exceed the number of the Jews of Palestine, even in those times when that country was best inhabited by them.

Those who made this first return into Judea, arrived there in Nisan, the first month of the Jewish year (which answers to part of March and part of April in our kalendar); for the a fecond month of the next year kalendar); for the a fecond month of the next year is faid to be in the second year after their return; and therefore, they must then have been a whole year in the land. As foon as they came thither, b they dispersed themselves according to their tribes, and the families of their fathers, into their feveral cities, and there betook themselves to rebuild their houses and again manure their lands, after they had now, from the destruction of Jerusalem, and the slight of the remainder of the people into Egypt, on the death of Gedaliah, lain desolate and uncultivated 52 years, according to the number of the fabbatical years, which they had neglected to obferve; for, according to the Mosaical law, they ought to have left c their lands tallow every feventh year. But, among other commandments of God, this also they had neglected: and therefore, d God made the land lie defolate without inhabitants or cultivation, till it had enjoyed the full number of its fabbaths that it had been deprived of. And this tells us how long the Jews had neglected this law of the fabbatical year: for it is certain, the land was defolated only 52 years, that is, from the death of Gedaliah till the end of the 70 years captivity, in the first year of the empire of Cyrus. And 52 sabbatical years make 52 weeks of years, which amount to 364 years; which carries up the computation to the beginning of the reign of Asa; and therefore, from that time the Jews had Lev. xxvi. 34. 35. 43. 2 Chron-xxxvi. 21.

^a Ezra iii. 8.

^b Ezra ii, Į. ii, 70. & iii. I. Neh. vii. 6.

ving neglected to observe the sabbatical years, till they had deprived the land of 52 of them, God made that land lie desolate, without cultivation or inhabitants, just so many years, till he had restored to it that full rest, which the wickedness of its inhabitants had, contrary to the law of their God, denied unto it. If we reckon the whole seventy years of the captivity into those years of desolation, which were to make amends for the sabbatical years that the land had been deprived of, then we must reckon the observation of them to have been laid aside for 70 weeks of years, that is, 490 years. But this will carry back the omission higher up than the days of David and Samuel, in whose time it is not likely that such a breach of the law of God would have been permitted in the land.

On the feventh month, which is called the month Tifri, all the people which had returned to their feveral cities gathered together at a Jerusalem, and there, on the first b day of that month, celebrated the feast of trumpets. This month began about the time of the autumnal equinox, and was c formerly the first month of the year, till it was d changed at the time of the coming up of the children of Ifrael out of Egypt; for that happening in the month of Abib, afterwards called Nifan, that month, for this reason, had the honour given it, as thenceforth, to be reckoned among the Ifraelites for the first month of the year, that is, in all ecclefiastical matters. Before this time Tifri e was reckoned every where to begin the year, because from thence did commence (it was thought) f the beginning of all things; it being the general opinion among the ancients, that the world was created, and first began, at the time of the autumnal equinox. And for this reason the Jews do itill. in their æra of the creation of the world, as well as in their æra of contracts, compute the beginning of the year from the first of Tifri, and all their bills, and bonds, and all other civil acts and contracts, are still dated among them according to the same computation. And from this month also they & began all their jubilees and fabbatical years. And therefore, although their ecclefiaftical year began from Nifan, and all their festivals were reckoned according to it, yet their civil year was still reckoned from Tifri, and the first day of that month was their new-year'sday,

² Ezra iii. 1.

b Ezra iii. 6. Levit. xxiii. 24. Numb. xxix. 1.

c Exod. xxiii. 16. and xxxiv. 22.

d Exod. xii. 2.

Chaldee Paraphraft on Exodus xii. 2.

f Vide Scaligerum de Emendatione Temporum, lib. 5.c. De Conditus Mundi, p. 366, &c.

³ Levit, xxv. 9.

day, and for the more folemn celebration of it, this feast of trumpets feems to have been appointed.

On the a 10th day of the same month was the great day of expiation, when the high priest made atonement for all the people of Ifrael; and on the b 15th day began the feast of tabernacles, and lasted till the 22d inclusively. During all which solemnities, the people staid at Jerusalem, and employed all that time to the best of their power to set forward the restoration of God's worship again in that place; toward which all that had riches contributed according to their abilities. And the acreewill offerings which were made on this occasion, belides 100 veltments for the priefts, amounted to 61,000 drams of gold, and 5000 minas of filver, which in all comes to about 75,500 pou de of our money; for every dram of gold is worth 10 fhilings of our money, and every mina of filver o pounds; for dit contained 60 shekels, and every e shekel of silver is worth of our money three shillings. And upon this fund they began the work. And a great fum it was to be raifed by fo fmall a number of people, and on their first return from their captivity, especially if they were only of the poorer fort, as the Rabbins fay. It must be supposed, that these offerings were made by the whole nation of the Jews, that is, by those who staid behind, as well as by those who returned; otherwise it is scarce possible to solve the matter; for all having an equal interest in that temple, and the daily facrifices there offered up having been in the behalf of all, it is very reasonable to suppose, that all did contribute to the building of it; and that especially seeing that, as long as that temple stood, f every Jew annually paid an half shekel, i. c. about 18 pence of our money, towards its repair, and the support of the daily service in it, into what parts soever they were difperfed through the whole world.

The first thing they did, was set o restore the alter of the Lord for burnt-offerings. This stood he in the middle of the inner court of the temple, exactly before the porch leading into the holy place; and hereon were made the daily offerings of the morning and evening service, and all other offerings, ordinary and extraordinary; which were offered up to God by fire. It had been beaten down and destroyed by the Babylonious at the burn-

b Levit xxiii. 34 Numb. xxix. 12. &c.

VOL. I

² Levit. xvi. 29. 30. and xxiii. 27. Numb. xxix. 7.

e Ezraii. 69. d Ezekiel. xlv. 12.

c Vide Bernardum de Mensuris & Ponderibus antiquis, p. 127 f Exod. xxx. 13—15. Maimonides - Shekalim, cap. 1, 2, 4

E Ezra iii. 3.

E See Lightfoot of the Temple, chap. 34.

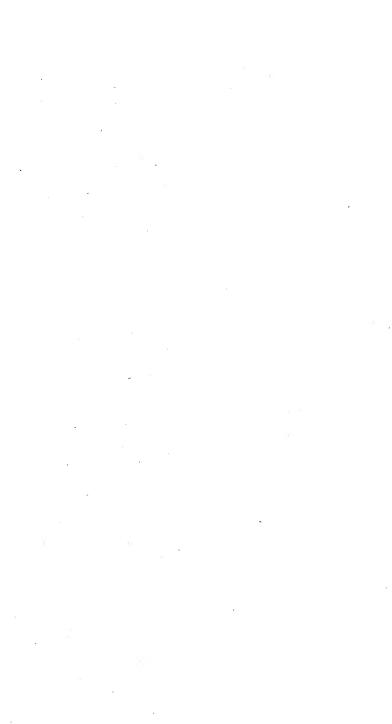

ing of the temple, and in the same place was it now again restored. That it a was built, and stood in another place, with a tabernacle round it, till the rebuilding of the temple was fully finished and completed, is a fancy without a foundation. It was certainly built in its proper place, b that is, in the fame place where it before flood, and there they daily offered facrifices upon it, even before any thing elfe of the temple was built about it. It was ca large pile built all of unhewn stones, 32 cubits (i.e. 48 feet) fquare at the bottom; from thence it rifing one cubit benched-in one cubit; and from thence, being 30 cubits fquare, it did rife five cubits, and benched-in one cubit; and from thence being 28 cubits square, it did rife three cubits, and benched in two cubits; from whence it did rife one cubit, which was the hearth, upon which the offerings were burned, and the benching-in of two cubits breadth was the passage round it, on which the priefts flood, when they tended the fire, and placed the facrifices on it. So this hearth was a fquare of 24 cubits, or 36 feet, on every fide, and one cubit high, which was all made of folid brass, and from hence it was called the d brazen altar. For it is not to be imagined, that it was all made of folid brafs; for to make up to big a pile all of that metal would coft a vast fum of money. And besides, if it were so made, it would not only be against the law, but also impracticable, for the use intended. It would be against the law, because thereby they are commanded, that wherefoever they should make an altar, other than the portable altar of the tabernacle, they should make it e of earth or else of unhewn stone. And it would be impracticable for the use intended, because, if it were all of brass, the fire contimually burning upon the top of it would fo heat the whole, and especially that part of it next the hearth, that it would be impossible for the priests to stand on it, when they were come this ther to officiate in tending the altar, and offering the facrifices thereon; and that especially fince they were always to officiate barefooted, without any thing at all upon their feet to fence them from the heat of it. It is not indeed any where commanded, that the prieffs should officiate barefooted; but among the garments afligned for the priefts (Exod. xxviii.) shoes not being named, they were supposed therefore to be forbid, and the text faving,

³ Biftiop Patrick in his comment on first Chronicles, chap. 9.

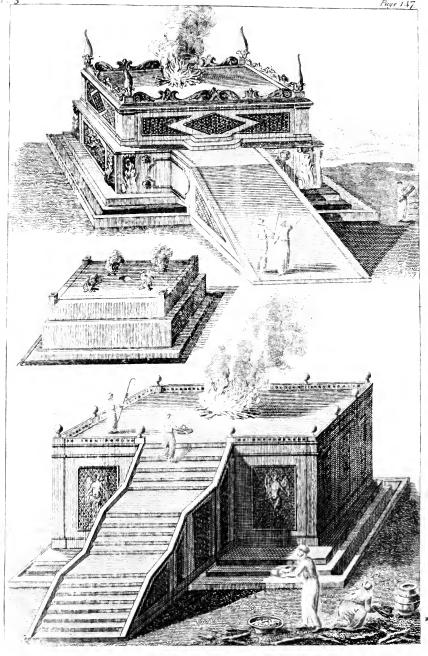

b Fizra iii. 2. For there it is fud, that they did fet the altar upon its bases or foundations, r. e. upon the same bases or foundations, on which it before had stood.

Milmioth in Middoth, Milmonides in Beth Habbechira, c. 1. 2.

d 1 Kings vill. 64. * Exod. xx. 24. 25.

faying, (ver. 4.) Thefe are the garments which they shall make, this (they fay) excludes all that are not there named. Moses being commanded, at the burning bush, a to put off his shoes, for that the ground on which he stood was holy, because of the extraordinary prefence of God then in that place; this they make a further argument for it: for, fay they, the temple was all hory for the same reason, that is, because of the extraordinary presence of God there residing in Shechinah over the mercy-leat. And for these reasons it was most strictly exacted, that the priefts thould be always barefooted in the temple, although their going there with their bare feet upon the marble pavement was very pernicious to the health of many of them. On the four corners of the altar, on the last benching in, where the priefts flood, when they offe ed the facrifices, there were fixed four small pillars of a cubit height, and a cubit on every fice, in the form of an exact cube. And these were the horns of the altar fo often mentioned in scripture. The middle of each of them was hollow, because therein was to be put some of the blood of the facrifices. The afcent up to the altar was by a gentle rifing on the fouth fide, called the Kibbesh, which was 32 cubits in length, and 16 in breadth, and landed upon the upper benching-in next the hearth, or the top of the altar; for b to go up to the altar by steps was forbid by the law. The form of the whole will be best understood by the annexed draught.

But their zeal for the temple being that which had brought most of them back again into Judea, the rebuilding of this was what they had their hearts most intent upon. And therefore having employed the first year

c in preparing materials, and contracting with carpenters and masons for the work, d in the second month of the second year they laid the foundation of the house; which was done with great folemnity: for Zerubbabel the governor, and Jeshua the high prieft, being prefent, with all the congregation, the trumpeters blew their trumpets, and musicians sounded their instruments, and fingers fung, all in praise to the Lord their God, and all the rest of the people shouted for joy, while the first stones were laid; only the old men, who had feen the glory of the first temple, and had no expectation that this, which was now a-building by a few poor exiles lately returned into their country, could ever equal that, which had all the riches of David and Solomon, two of the wealthiest princes of the east, expended in the erecting of it, wept at the remembrance of the old temple, while others rejoiced at the laying the foundations of the new. And K 2 indeed

² Exod. iii. 5. Acts vii. 33. ³ Exod. xx, 26;

c Ezra iii. 7. 2 Ezra iii. 8—10: 8:0:

indeed the difference between the former temple and this, which was now a building, was fo great, that God himfelf tells the prophet a Haggai, that the latter, in comparison with the former, was as nothing; fo much did it come short of it. But this is not to be understood of its bigness: for the second temple was of the farce dimensions with the first; it being built upon the very far e four dations, and therefore it was exactly of the same length and breadth. Cyrus's commission may seem to make it broader; for that allows b 60 cubits to its breadth; whereas Solomon's temple is faid to have been but o 20 cubits in breadth., But these different measures are to be understood in respect of the different diffances between which the faid measures were taken. The 20 cubits breadth, faid of Solomon's temple, was only the breadth of the temple itself, measuring from the inside of the wall on the one fide, to the infide of the wall on the other fide. But the 60 cubits breadth in Cyrus's commission was the breadth of the whole building, measuring from the infide of the outer wall of it on the one fide, to the infide of the outer wall on the other fide. For d besides the temple itself, which contained the holy place, and the holy of holies, each 20 cubits broad, there were thick walls inclosing it on each fide, and without them chambers on each fide; then another wall, then a gallery, and then the outer walls of all inclosing the whole building, being 5 cubits thick; which altogether made up the whole breadth to be 70 cubits from out to out; from which deducting the 5 cubits breadth of the outer wall on each fide, you have remaining the breadth of Cyrus's commission, that is, 60 cubits; which was the breadth of the whole building from the infide of one outer wall to the infide of the other. So that the difference of the faid 20 cubits breadth, and of the faid 60 cubits breadth, is no more than this, that one of them was meafured from the infide to the infide of the inner walls, and the other from the infide to the infide of the outer walls of the faid temple.

But the glory of Solomen's temple was not in the temple itself, much less in the bigness of it; for that alone, was but a small pile of building, as containing no more than 150 feet in length, and 105 in breadth, taking the whole of it together from out to out; which is exceeded by many of our parish churches. The main grandeur and excellency of it confished, 1/2, In its ornaments, its workmanship being every where exceeding curious, and its overlayings vall and prodigious: for the overlaying of the holy of holies only, which was a room but 30 feet figure,

^a Maggai ii. 3.

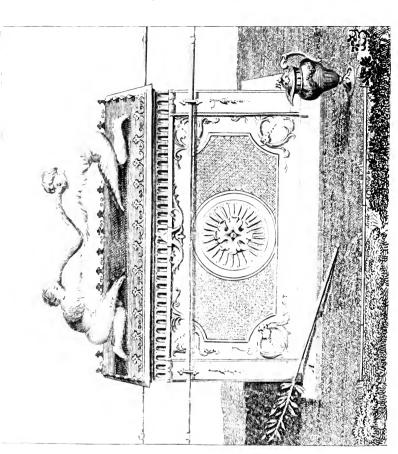

F Ezra vi. 3.

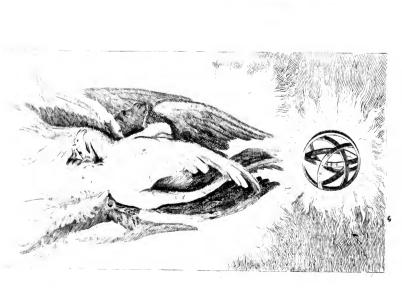

1 Kings vi. 2. 2 Chron. iii. 3.

d See Lighfoot of the temple.

See the representation of the temple, preceding page.

ARK of the CONFRANT

A Museus rad which blaffromed

Omer or reflect of about three prins full of Manna

III Czekiels Ywon

square, and 30 feet high, amounted a to 600 talents of gold, which comes to 4,320,000 l. of our sterling money. 2dly, In its materials; for Solomon's temple was all built of new large stones, hewn out in the most curious and artful manner; whereas the fecond temple was mostly built of fuch stones only as they dug up out of the ruins of the former. 3dly, In its out-buildings; for the court, in which the temple flood, and that without it called the court of the women, were built round with stately buildings and cloysters; and the gates entering thereinto were very beautiful, and fumptuous; and the outer court, which was a large square encompassing all the rest, of 750 feet on every side, was furrounded with a most stately and magnificent cloyster, suftained by three rows of pillars on three fides of it, and by four on the fourth: and all the outbuildings then lay in their rubbish, without any prospect of a speedy reparation; and there could then be no such ornaments or materials in this new temple, as there were in the former. In process of time, indeed, all the out-buildings were reftored, and fuch ornaments and materials were added, on Herod's repairing of it, that the second temple, after that, came little short herein of the former; and there b are some who will say, that it exceeded it. But still what was the main glory of the first temple, those extraordinary marks of the divine favour, with which it was honoured, were wholly wanting in the fecond. The Jews reckon them up in thefe c five particulars; 1. The ark of the covenant and the mercy-feat which was upon it; 2. The Shechinah, or divine prefence; 3. The Urim and Thummim; 4. The holy fire upon the altar; and, 5. The spirit of prophecy.

I. The ark of the covenant was a small chest, or cosser, three feet nine inches in length, and two feet three inches in breadth, and two feet three inches in height; in which were put the two tables of the law, as well as the broken ones (fay the Rabbins) as the whole; and that there was nothing else in

K 3 it,

² Chron. iii. 8.

b R. Azarias in Meor Enaiim, part 3. c. 51.

^c Talmud Bab. in Yoma, c. 1. f. 21. and Talmud Hierofol, in Taanith, c. 2. f. 65.

d Exod. xxv. 1c-22.

c For the proof of this, they bring the 2d verse of the 10th chapter of Deuteronomy, which they read thus: And I will write on the tables the words that were on the first table, which thou breakest, and hast put in the ark. And it is true, the word is VESHAMATA, i. e. and thou hast put, in the preter tense; but it being with a wan before it, that turns the preter tense into the future, and therefore it must be read, and thou shalt put them, as in our translation, and not and thou hast put them, as the fautors of this opinion would have it.

it, when it was brought into Solomon's temple, is faid in two places a of scripture. But the Rabbins raise a controversy concerning Aaron's rod and the pot of manna, and the original volume of the law written by Moses's own hand, whether they were not also in the ark. It is said of b Aaron's rod, and the pot c of manna, that they were laid up before the testimony; and it being agreed on all hands, that by the testimony are meant the two tables, those who interpret these words [before the te/limony] in the strictest sense, will have the said rod and pot of manna to have been laid up immediately before the tables within the ark; for otherwise (fay they) they would not have been laid up before the testimony, but before the ark. But others, who do not understand the word in so strict a sense, say, they were laid up in the holy of holies without the ark, in a place just before it; thinking that in this polition, without the ark, they may be as well faid to be laid up before the testimony or tables of the law, as if they had been placed immediately before them within the ark. But the holy apostle St Paul decides this controverfy; for he positively tells us, That a within the ark were the golden pot, that had manna, and Aaron's rod, and the tables of the covenant. As to the book, or volume of the law, it being commanded to be put e mitzzad, i. e. on the fide of the ark, those who interpret that word of the infide, place it within the ark, and those who interpret it of the outside, place it on the outfide of it, in a cafe or coffer made of purpose for it, and laid on the right fide, meaning, by the right fide, that end of it which was on the right hand. And the last feem to be in the right as to this matter; for, 1st, The same word, f mitzzad, is made afe of, where it is faid, that the Philiftines fent back the ark with an offering of jewels of gold put in a coffer by the fide of it. And there it is certain that word must be understood of the outfide, and not of the infide. 2dly, The ark was not of capacity enough to hold the volume of the whole law of Mofes with the other things placed therein. 3dly, The end of laying up the original volume of the law in the temple was, that it might be referved there, as the authentic copy, by which all others were to be corrected, and fet right; and therefore, to anfwer this end, it must have been placed so, as that access might a I Kings viii. 9. 2 Chron. v. 10.

b Numb. xvii. 10.

Exod. xvi. 32. where to lay up before the Lord, is, by the Jewish commentators, interpreted as the same with before the testimony of the Lord.

d Hebrews ix. 4. and hereto agree Abarbanel on 1 Kings viii. 9. & R. Levi Ben Gerfom.

e Deut. xxxi. 26.

¹ x Same vi. 8.

be had thereto on all occasions requiring it; which could not have been done, if it had been put within the ark, and thut up there by the cover of the mercy-feat over it, which was not to be removed. And, 4thly, When a Hilkiah the high priest, in the time of Josiah, sound the copy of the law in the temple, there is nothing faid of the ark; neither is it there spoken of, as taken from thence, but as found elsewhere in the temple. And therefore, putting all this together, it feems plain, that the volume of the law was not laid within the ark, but had a particular coffer, or repository of its own, in which it was placed on the side of it. And the word mitzzad, which answers to the Latin, a latere, cannot truly bear any other meaning in the Hebrew language. And therefore the Chaldee paraphrase, which goes under the name of Jonathan, Ben Uzziel, in paraphrafing on these words of Deuteronomy, b Take this book of the law, and put it in the fide of the ark of the covenant, renders it thus, Take the book of the law, and place it in a case, or coffer, on the right side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God. Over c the ark was the mercy-feat, and it was the covering of it. It was all made of folid gold, and of the thickness (fay the Rabbins) of an hand's breadth. At the two ends of it were two cherubims, looking inward towards each other, with wings expanded, which embracing the whole circumference of the mercy feat, did meet on each fide in the middle; all which (fay the d Rabbins) was made out of the same mass, without joining any of the parts by folder. e Here it was where the Shechinah, or divine presence, rested both in the tabernacle and temple, and was visibly seen in the appearance of a cloud over it: and from hence f the divine oracles were given out by an audible voice, as often as God was confulted in the behalf of his people. And hence it is, that God is fo often faid in feripture g to dwell between the cherubims, that is between the cherubims on the mercy-feat, because there was the feat or throne of the vifible appearance of his glory among them. And h for this reason the high priest appeared before this mercy-feat once every year, on the great day of expiation, when he was to make his nearest approach to the divine prefence, to mediate, and make atonement for the whole people of Ifrael. And all elfe of that nation, who ferved God according Κа

a 2 Kings xxii. 8.

b Deut. xxxi. 26.

Exod. xxv. 17 .--- 22. d R. Levi Ben Gerfom, R. Solomon, Abarbanel, and others.

Levit. xvi. 2.

f Exod. xxv. 22. Numb. vii. 89. g 1 Sam. iv. 4. 2 Sam. vi. 2.

² Kings xix. 15. 1 Chron. xiii. 6. Pfal. Ixxx. 1. & xc. 1.

h Levit. xvi. 29.--34. Numb. xxix. 7. Heb. ix. 7. Talmud in Yonia.

to the Levitical law, made it the centre of their worship, not only in the temple, when they came up thither to worship, but every where elfe in their dispersion through the whole world; whenever they prayed, a they turned their faces towards the place where the ark stood, and directed all their devotions that way. And therefore the author of the book b Cozri justly faith, that the ark, with the mercy-feat, and cherubin, were the foundation, root, heart, and marrow, of the whole temple, and all the Levitical worthip therein performed. And therefore, had there nothing elie of the first temple been wanting in the second but the ark only, this alone would have been reason enough for the old men to have wept, when they remembered the first temple in which it was, and also for the faying of Haggai, That the c fecond temple was as nothing in comparison of the first; so great a part had it in the glory of this temple, as long as it remained in it. However, the defect was supplied as to the outward form: for in d the fecond temple, there was also an ark made of the same shape and dimensions with the first, and put in the same place. But though it was there substituted in its stead (as there was need that such an one should for the service that was annually performed before it on the great day of expiation), yet it had none of its prerogatives or honours conferred upon it; for there were no tables of the law, no Aaron's rod, no pot of manna in it, no appearance of the divine glory over it, no oracles given from it. The first ark was made and confecrated by God's appointment, and had all these prerogatives and honours given unto it by him. But the fecond, being appointed and substituted by man only, to be in the stead and place of the other, could have none of them. And the only use that was made of it, was to be a representative of the former on the great day of expiation; and to be a repository of the holy scriptures, that is, of the original copy of that collection which was made of them after the captivity, by Ezra and the men of the great fynagogue; as will be hereafter related: for when this copy was perfected, it was there laid up in it. And, in imitation hereof, the Jews, in all their fynagogues, have a like e ark or coffer, of the fame fize or form, in which they keep the fcriptures belonging to the fynagogue; and from whence they take it out with great folemnity. whenever they use it, and return it with the like, when they have done with it. That there was any ark at all in the second temple, many of the Jewith writers do deny; and tay, that the ^{*} r Kings viii. 48. Daniel vi. 10. d Lightfoot of the temple, c. 15. b Part II. 6 28.

b Part II. § 28.
c Chap, ii. g.
videBuxtorfii Synagogam, c.14.

whole service of the great day of expiation was performed in the second temple, not before any ark, but before a the stone on which the ark stood in the first temple. But since, on their building of the fecond temple, they found it necessary, for the carrying on of their worship in it, to make a new altar of incense, a new shew-bread table, and a new candlestick, instead of those which the Babylonians had destroyed, though none of them could be confecrated as in the first temple, there is no reason to believe, but that they made a new ark also; there being as much need of it, for the carrying on of their worship, as there was of the others. And fince the holy of holies, and the vail that was drawn before it, were wholly for the (ake of the ark, what need had there been of these in the second ten ple, if there had not been the other also? Were it clear, that it is the figure of the ark that is on the triun phal arch of 'titus, still remaining at Rome, this would be an undeniable demonstration for what I here fay: for therein his triumph for the taking of Jerusalem being set forth in sculpture, ti ere is to be feen, even to this day, carried before him in that triumph, the golden candleftick, and another figure, which Adrichomius and fome others fay is the ark : but Villalpandus, Cornelius a Lapide, Ribara, and the generality of learned men, who have viewed that triumphal arch, tell us, that is the table of shewbread. The obscurity of the figures, now almost worn out by length of tine, makes the difficulty: but, by the exacteft draughts that I have feen of it, it plainly appears to have been the shew-bread table, especially from the two cups on the top of it: for two fuch cups filled with frankinces fe were always put upon the shew-bread table, but never upon the ark. Josephus, who was prefent at the triumph of Titus, and faw the whole of it, b tells us of three things therein carried before him: 1 ft, The shew-bread table; 2d v, The golden candlestick (which he mentions in the same order, as they are on the arch); and, 3dly, The law, which is not on the arch. Most likely it was emitted there only for want of room to engrave it : for as there is the figure of a table carried aloft before the shew-bread table, and another before the golden candlestick, to express, by the writings on them, what the things were, which they were carried before; fo, after the golden candlestick, there is on the faid arch a third table without any thing after it; the arch there ending, without affording room for any other fculpture; where the thing emitted, no doubt, was what Josephus faith was carried in the third place, that is, the law; which is not to be understood of any common volume (of which there were hundreds every where in common use, both in their fynagogues and in private hands), but of that which was found in the temple (as the other two particulars were), and laid up there, as the authentic and most facred copy of it. And it cannot be imagined, it thould be carried otherwife, than in that repository in which it was laid, that is, in the ark which was made for it under the fecond temple. But, to return to the ark under the first temple, which was that I was describing: it was made a of wood, excepting only the mercy-feat, but overlaid with gold all over, both in the infide and the outfide, and it had a ledge of gold furrounding it on the top, in form of a crown; into which, as into a focket, the cover was let in. The place where it flood was the b innermost and most facred part of the temple, called The holy of holies, and fometimes The most holy place, which was ordained and made of purpole for its reception; the whole end and reason of that most facred place being none other, but to be a tabernacle for it. This place or room was c of an exact cubic form, as being 30 feet square and 30 feet high. In the centre of it the ark was placed upon a stone (fay the Rabbins), rifing there three fingers breadth above the floor, to be, as it were, a pedestal for it. On the two sides of it stood e two cherubims 15 feet high, one on the one fide, and the other on the other fide, at equal distance between the centre of the ark and each fide-wall; where, having their wings expanded, with two of them they touched the faid fide-walls, and with the other two they did meet, and touch each other exactly over the middle of the ark; fo that the ark stood exactly in the middle between these two cherubims. But it is not in respect of these, that God is fo often faid in scripture to dwell between the cherubims, but in respect of the cherubims only, which were on the mercy-feat, as hath been observed: for most of those places of feripture, wherein this phrase is found, were written before Solomon's temple was built; and till then there were no fuch cherubims in the most holy place; for they were put there in the temple only, and not in the tabernacle. These cherubims flood not with their faces outward, as they are commonly represented, but with their faces f inward; and therefore were in the posture of figures worshipping, and not in the posture of figures to be worthipped, as fome fautors of idolatry do a Exed. xxv. 10-22.

^a This the Rabbins call the ftone of foundation, and give us a great cleal of trash about it. See the Mishna in Yoma, & Buxtor, de Arça, c. 22.

b Josephus de Belle Judaico, lib. 7. c. 17.

ь т Kings viii. 16.

¹ Kings vi. 20.

d Yoma, c. v. § 2.

c 1 Kings vi. 23. 2 Chron, iii. 1c. f 2 Chron, iii. 13.

THE HOLLY OF HOTHES

affert. The ark, while it was ambulatory with the tabernacle. was carried a by staves on the shoulders of the Levites. These flaves were overlaid with gold, and put through golden rings made for them, not on the fides of the ark, as all hitherto have afferted, but on the two ends of it; which plainly appears from this, that, when it was carried into the temple of Solomon, and fixed there in the most holy place, which was ordained and prepared of purpose for it, the scriptures tell us, b that the staves being drawn out, reached downward towards the holy place. which was without the most holy place, or holy of holies: for, had they been on the fides of the ark lengthway, they would, on their being drawn out, have reached towards the fide-wall. and not downward, unless you suppose the ark to have been there put sideway, with one of its ends downward, and the other upward; which no one will fay. And it is a plain argument against it, that the high priest, when he appeared before the ark on the great day of expiation, is faid to have gone up to it c between the staves; but it these staves had been drawn out from the fides, there would then have been but two feet three inches between them, which would not have afforded the high priest room enough, with all his vestments on, to have passed up between them towards the ark, for the personnance of that duty. Neither could the bearers, in so near a position of the staves to each other, go with any convenience in the carrying of the ark from place to place on their shoulders, but they must necessarily have incommoded each other, both before and behind, in going so near together. What became of the old ark, on the destruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar, is a a difpute among the Rabbins. Had it been carried to Babylon with the other veffels of the temple, it would again have been brought back with them at the end of the captivity. But that it was not fo, is agreed on all hands; and therefore it must follow, that it was destroyed with the temple; as were also the altar of incense, the shewbread-table, and the golden candlestick: for all these in the second temple were made a-new after the rebuilding of it. However, the Tews contend, that it was hid and preserved by Jeremiah, say some, out of the e second book of Maccabees. But f most of them will have it, that King Josiah, being forctold by Huldah the prophetels, that the temple would fpeedily

² Exod. xxv. 13. 14. &c. & xxvii. 5. Numb. iv. 4—6. 1 Chron. xv. 15. 6 1 Kings viii. 8. 2 Chron. v. 9.

Missina in Yoma, c. v. Maimonides in Avodhatit. Yom Haccipurima

d Vide Buxtorfium de Arca, c. 21. 22.

^{° 2} Maccabees ii.

i Vide Buntorfium, ibid.

speedily after his death, be destroyed, caused the ark to be put in a vault under ground, which Solomon, foreseeing this destruction, had caused of purpose to be built, for the preserving of it. And, for the proof hereof, they produce the text, where Josiah commands the Levites a to put the holyark in the house "which Solomom the sou of David, king of Israel, did build;" interpreting it of his putting of the ark into the said vault, where, they say, it hath iain hid ever since, even to this day, and from thence shall be manifested, and brought out again in the days of the Messiah; whereas the words import no more, than that Manasseh, or Ammon, having removed the ark from whence it ought to have stood, Josiah commanded it again to be restored into its proper place. Other dotages of the Rabbins concerning this ark I forbear troubling the reader with.

II. The fecond thing wanting in the fecond temple, which was in the first, was the Shechinah, or the divine presence, manifested by a visible cloud resting over the mercy-seat, as hath been already shewn. This cloud did there first appear when Moses confecrated the tabernacle, and was afterwards, on the contecrating of the temple by Solomon, translated thither. And there it did continue in the same visible manner, till that temple was destroyed; but, after that, it never appeared more. Its constant place was b directly over the mercy-seat; but it rested there only, when the ark was in its proper place, in the tabernacle first, and afterwards in the temple, and not while it was in movement from place to place, as it often was during the time of the tabernacle.

III. The third thing wanting in the fecond temple, which was in the first, was the Urim and Thummim. Concerning this many have written very much; but, by offering their various opinions, have helped rather to perplex than explain the matter. The points to be inquired into concerning it, are these two, 1st, What it was? and, 2dly, What was the use of it?

1st, As to what it was, the fcripture hath no where explained it any farther, than to fay, that it was a fomething which Mosfes did put into the breast-plate of the high priest. This breast-plate was a piece of cloth doubled, of a span square, in which were set in sockets of gold, 12 precious stones, bearing the names of the 12 tribes of israel engraven on them; which being fixed to the ephod, or upper vestment of the high priest's robes, was worn by him on his breast on all solemn occasions.

Title

ĬΩ

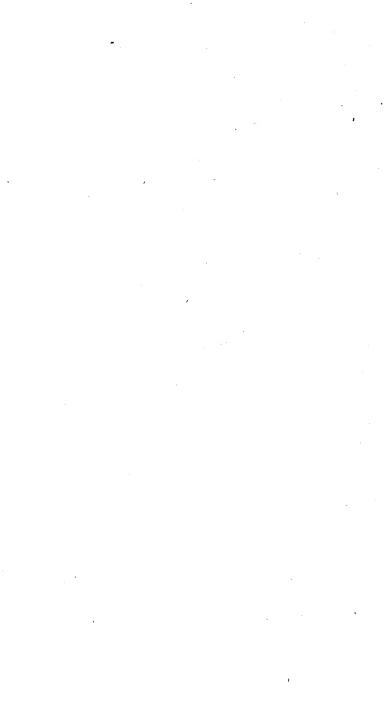

² Chron. HXXV. 3.

b Levit. xvi. 2.

Exod. xaviii. 30. Levit. viii. 8.

d Lixod, xaviii, 15-30, & xxix, 8-21,

In this breast-plate the Urim and Thummim, fay 2 the scriptures, were put. They who hold them to have been some corporeal things there placed beside the stones, will have them to be inclosed within the folding or doubling of the breast-plate, which, they fay, was doubled for this very purpose, that it might be made fit, as in a purse, to contain them in it. b Christophorus a Castro, and from him o Dr Spencer, tells us, that they were two images, which being thus shut up in the doubling of the breaft-plate, did from thence give the oracular anfwer, by a voice. But this is a conceit, which d a late very learned man hath fufficiently shewn to be both abfurd and impious, as favouring more of heathenism and idolatry, than of the pure institution of a divine law. Some will have them to be e the Tetragrammaton, or the ineffable name of God, which being written or engraven, fay they, in a mysterious manner, and done in two parts, and in two different ways, were the things fignified by the Urim and Thummin, which Moses is said to have put into the breast-plate; and that these did give the oracular power to it. And f many of the Rabbins go this way; for they have all of them a great opinion of the miraculous power of this name: and therefore, not being able to gainfay the evidence which there is for the miracles of Jesus Christ, their usual answer is, g that he stole this name out of the temple, from the stone of foundation on which it was there written (that is, the stone on which the ark formerly stood), and keeping it hid always about him, by virtue of that did all his wondrous works. Others, who hold in general for the addition of some things corporeal, denoted by the means of Urim and Thummim, h think not fit to inquire, what they were as to the particular, but are of opinion, that they were things of a mysterious nature, hid and closed up in the doubling of the breast-plate, which Moses only knew of, who did put them there, and no one else was to pry into; and that thefe were the things that gave the oracular power to the high priest, when he had the breastplate on. But this looking too much like a telefine, or a spell, which a Exod. xxviii. 30. Levit. viii. 2.

b De Vaticinio.

c In Differtatione de Urim et Thummim.

d Dr Pocock in his comment on Hofea, c. iii. ver. 4.

[°] Paraphrasis Jonathanis in Exod. xxviii. 30. Liber Zohar, soi. 105 Editionis Gremonenis.

f R. Solomon, R. Mofes Ben Nachman, R. Becai, R. Levi Ben Gerfom, alique.

³ Toledoth Jesu ex editione Wagenselii, p. 6. 7. Raymundi Pogio Fidei, part 2. c. 8. Buxtorsii Lexicon, Rab. p. 2541.

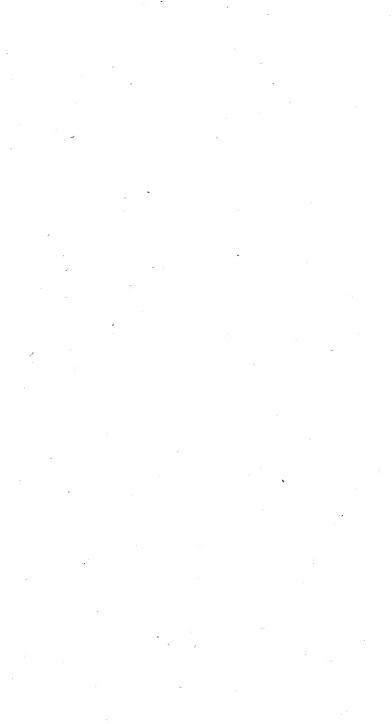

b R. David Kimchi, R. Abraham Seva, Aben Eura, aliique, which were of those abominations that God abhorred, it will be fafest to hold, that the words Urim and Thummim meant no fuch things, but only the divine virtue and power, given to the breast-plate in its consecration, of obtaining an oraculous anfwer from God, whenever counsel was asked of him by the high priest with it on, in such manner as his word did direct; and that the names of Urim and Thummim were given hereto only. to denote the clearness and perfection which these oracular anfwers always carried with them; for Urim fignifieth light, and Thummim, perfection: for these answers were not, like the heathen oracles, enigmatical and ambiguous; but always clear and manifest; not such as did ever fall thort of perfection, either of fulness in the answer, or certainty in the truth of it. And hence it is, that the Septuagint translate Urim and Thummim by the words Δήλωσιν κ, Aληθειαν, i. e. manifestation and truth, because all these oracular answers given by Urim and Thummim, were always clear and manifest, and their truth ever certain and infallible.

2. As to the use which was made of the Urim and Thummim, it was to ask counsel of God in difficult and momentous cases relating to the whole state of Israel. In order whereto, the high priest did put on his robes, and over them his breast-plate, in which the Urim and Thummim were, and then prefented himself before God to ask counsel of him. But he a was not to do this for any private man, but only for the king, for the prefident of the Sanhedrim, for the general of the army, or for tome other great prince or public governor in Ifrael, and not for any b private affairs, but for fuch only as related to the public interest of the nation, either in church or state: for he appeared before God, with the names of the twelve tribes of Ifrael upon his breaft-plate; and therefore, whatever counsel he asked, was in the name and on the behalf of all the tribes, and confequently it must have been concerning matters which related publicly to them all. The place where he presented himself before God, was c before the ark of the covenant, not within the vail of the holy of holies (for thither he never entered but once a-year, on the great day of expiation), but without the vail in the holy place: and there standing with his robes and breastplate on, and his face turned directly towards the ark and the mercy-feat over it, on which the divine prefence refted, he proposed the matter concerning which counsel of God was asked,

" Maimonides, ibid. Yalkut. fol. 248. col. x.

Missinah in Yoma, c. 7. § 5. The Talmudists prove this from Numb, xxvii. 21. See Maimonides in cele Hammikdash, c. 10. v. 12. b Abarbanel in Exod, xxviii. & in Deut, xxxiii. R. Levi Ben Gersom, Maimonid, ibid, aliique.

CONSULTING THE HIGH PRIEST,

and directly behind him, at some distance without the holy place, perchance at the door (for farther no laymen could approach) stood the person in whose behalf the counsel was asked, whether it were the king, or any other public officer of the nation, there. with all humility and devotion expecting the answer that should be given. But how this answer was given is that which is made the great dispute. The a most common received opinion among the Jews is, that it was by the shining and protuberating of the letters in the names of the twelve tribes graven on the twelve stones in the breast-plate of the high priest, and that in them he did read the answer. They b explain it by the example which we have in the first chapter of the book of Judges. There the children of Israel, either by the president of the Sanhedrim, or some other officer intrusted with the public interest, did ask counsel of God; "Who shall go up for us against the Canaanites first to fight against them?" The answer given by the high priest who did by Urim and Thummim then ask counsel of God for them, was, " Judah shall go up:" for having asked the counsel, he did immediately (fay they) look into the breast-plate, and saw there those letters shining above the rest, and protuberating beyond them; which being combined into words made up the answer which was given. And this notion was very ancient among them; for both d Josephus and Philo Judæus have it; and from them feveral of the f ancient fathers of the Christian church give the same account of this matter. But there are unanswerable objections against it: for, 1st, All the letters of the Hebrew alphabet are not to be found in these 12 names, four of them, that is, Cheth, Teth, Zaddi, and Koph, being wholly wanting in them; and therefore an answer could not be given this way to every thing concerning which counfel might have been asked of God. To folve this, they have added the names of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to the breast-plate. But still the letter Teth will be wanting; and therefore, farther to botch up the matter, they have added also these words, Col elleh Shilte Israel, i. e. All these are the tribes of Israel. But this is not only without any foundation in scripture, but rather contrary to it; for the description of the breast-plate in scripture being very particular.

^a Maimonides in Cele Hammikdash, c. 10. § 11. Zohar in Exodum. Yalkut ex antiquo libro Siphre, R. Becai in Deut. xxxiii. 8. Ramban, R. Levi Ben Gersom. Abarbanel. R. Azarias in meor Engiam, R. Abraham Seba, aliique.

b Abarbanel in Legem, Ramban in Legem.

Judges i. 1. & i. 2. d Antiq, lib. iii. c. 9.

De Monarchia, lib. 2.

f Chrysostom. Hom. 37, adversus Judæos August, lib. 2. Questionum supra Exodum, aliique, ticular, in the reckoning up of all its parts, feems plainly to exclude whatever is not there named. 2dly, The affertors of this opinion do not tell us where the words which they would have added were placed in the breast-plate. They could not be written or engraven on the breast-plate itself; for that was only a piece of cloth. They must therefore be engraven, either on some of the twelve stones, or else on others set there on purpose for it. They could not be on any of the twelve stones. because on them were only engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Ifrael; and they could not be on other stones, because there were none other fet there, but these twelve stones only. And in these two particulars the scriptures are sufficiently pofitive, to exclude all fuch additions. 3dly, They that hold this opinion are forced to have recourse to the spirit of prophecy in the high priest, for the right combining of these shining and protuberating letters that were to make up the words of which the answer did consist; which is a difficulty of itself alone fufficient to explode this conceit. 4thly, There were some answers given of that length (as particularly that in 2d Samuel, ch. v. ver. 23. 24.), that all the letters in the breaft-plate. taking in all those also which the affertors of this opinion have added, will not fuffice for them.

It would be too tedious to add all else that might be said to shew the absurdity of this opinion. Dr Spencer deservedly saith of it, that it is a taluudical camel, which no one that is in his wits can ever fwallow.

There are also other opinions offered by others concerning this matter. But to me it appears plain from scripture, that when the high priest appeared before the vail to ask counsel of God, the answer was given him by an audible voice from the mercy feat, which was within behind the vail. There it was that a Moles went to ask counsel of God in all cases, and from thence he was answered by an audible voice: for from thence God communed with him of all those things which he gave him in commandment unto the children of Ifrael. And in the fame way did God afterwards communicate his will to the governors of Ifrael, as often as he was confulted by them, only with this difference, that whereas Mofes, through the extraordinary favour that was granted unto him, had immediate access to the divine presence, and God did there commune with 1 im, and speak to him, as it were, b face to face, as a man speaketh to his friend, none other was admitted thither to ask counsel of him, but through c the mediation of the high priest, who, in his stead, asked counsel for him by Urim and Thummim, that is, by presenting himself with the breast-plate on, over all his other robes, before the vail, exactly over against the mercyfeat, where the divine prefence refled. And when he thus prefented himfelf in due manner, according to the prefcription of the divine law, God gave him an answer in the same manner as he did unto Moses, that is, by an audible voice from the mercy-feat. For in a many inflances, which we have in scripture, of God's being consulted this way, the answer in every one of them, b except two, is ushered in with, The Lord faid; and, when the Ifraelites made peace with the Gibeonites, they are blamed in that they asked not counsel c at the mouth of God: both which phrases seem plainly to express a vocal answer; and, taking them both together, I think, they can scarce import any thing else. And for this reason it is, that the holy of holies, the place where the ark and the mercy-feat flood, from whence this answer was given, is so often in scripture called d the oracle, because from thence the divine oracles of God were uttered forth to those that asked counsel of him.

^a Exod. xxv.22. & xxx. 6. Numb. ^b Exod. xxxiii. 11. ^eii. 89, ^c Numb. xxvii.21. Judg. xx. 2°.

This, I take to be plain, was the manner of confulting God by Urim and Thummim in the tabernacle; but how it was done in the camp raiseth another question: for it appeareth by scripture. that either the high priest, or another deputed in his stead, always went with the armies of Ifrael to the wars, and carried with him the ephod and breast-plate, therewith to ask counsel of God by Urim and Thummim in all difficult emergencies that might happen. Thus e Phinehas went to the wars against the Midianites with the holy instruments, that is, fay the Jewish commentators, f with the cphod and the breaft-plate, which were, fay they, put into an ark or coffer made on purpose for it, and carried by Levites on their shoulders, as the other ark was. And of this ark they understand that place of scripture, where Saul faith to Ahiah the high priest, & Bring hither the ark of God; for this could not be the ark of the covenant; for that was then at Kirjath-jearim, and never ought to have been removed from its VOL. I.

^a Judg. i. 1. 2. xx. 18. 23. 28. 1 Sam. x. 22. xxiii. 2. 4. 11. 12. 2 Sam. ii. 1. & v. 19. 23.

b 1 Sam. xxx. 7. 8. 2 Sam. xxi. 1.

c Josh. ix. 14.

d Pfal, xxvin. 2. I Kings vi. 5. 16. 19. 20-23. 31. & vii. 49. & viii. 6.8. 2 Chron. iii. 16. iv. 20. & v. 7. 9.

e Numb. xxxi. 6.

f Paraphrafis Chaldaica, Jonathanis Ben Uzziel Textum interpretatur bis verbis. Et mifit eos Mofes, et Phineafum, filium Eleazaris Sacerdotum, ad bellum, et Urim et Thummin Sanctitatis ad interrogundum per ca.

² Sam. xiv. 18.

place in the tabernacle to be carried to the wars, or any where else from its proper station, and never was so but once against the Philistines; and then God gave the armies of Israel, and also the ark itself, into the hands of the enemy, for the punishment hereof. It must therefore have been no other ark which Saul called to Ahiah for, than that ark, or coffer, in which the ephod and breaft-plate were carried; and the end for which he called for it, shews the thing; for it was to ask counsel of God, for which the ephod and breast-plate served. So that the saying of Saul to Ahiah, Bring hither the ark, importeth no more, than the faying of David atterwards to Abiathar in the like cafe, a Bring hither the ephod. For this ark was the coffer in which the ephod was kept, and with which Abiathar fled to David, when Saul destroyed his father's house. And of the same ark they understand the saying of Uriah the Hittite unto David, when he excused his not going to his house, and lying with his wife. b "The ark, and Ifrael, and Judah, abide in tents, and my lord loab, and the fervants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields; shall I then go into my house to eat, and to drink, and to lie with my wife?" For if this be understood of the ark of the covenant, and the tent or tabernacle in which it was kept, what he faid would have been a reason for him never to have lain with his wife; for that was always kept in such a tent or tabernacle, till the temple of Solomon was built. It is most likely, therefore, that the ark which he speaks of was the ark, or coffer, in which the ephod and breast-plate were put, which the priest carried with him who was fent to the war.

The priest that was sent on this occasion, that he might be fully qualified to act in the high priest's stead, whenever there should be occasion for him to ask counsel of God by Urim and Thummin, was a confectated to the office by the holy anointing oil, in the same manner as the high priest was; and therefore he was called, The anointed for the wars. But how he had the answer is the difficulty: for there was no mercy-seat in the camp to appear before, or from whence to receive the oracle, as there was in the tabernacle. And yet that such oracles were given in the camp is certain, from several instances which we have of it in scripture: for David did, by the ephod and breast-plate only, ask counsel of God three several times, in the case of Keilah; and twice at Ziklag, once on the pursuit of those who had burnt that city, and again on his going from thence for Hebron, there to take possession of [&]quot; I Sam. xxiii. g.

b 2 Sam. xi. 11.

Maimonides in Cele Hammika

dash, c. r. f 7. and in Melachim, c. 7.

d I Sam. xxiii.

[&]quot; I Sam. XXX 8. 2 Sam. ii. I.

the kingdom of Judah, on the death of Saul; and on every one of these times he had an answer given him, though it is cerrain the ark of the covenant was not then present with him. It is most likely, fince God allowed that counsel should be thus asked of him in the camp without the ark, as well as in the tabernacle where the ark was, that the answer was given in the same manner by an audible voice. It seems most probable, that the priest anointed for the wars had a tent in the camp, on purpose there erected for this use, in which a part was separated by a vail, in the same manner as the holy of holies was in the tabernacle, and that, when he asked counsel of God in the camp, he appeared there before that vail in the fame manner as the high priest, on the like occasion, did before that in the tabernacle, and that the answer was given from behind it, though no ark or mercy-feat was there. And the words of Uriah above recited plainly refer us to fuch a tent. And it cannot be agreeable to a religion of fo much ceremony and folemnity, to suppose them to be without it for so facred an office.

Although this way of asking counsel of God was frequently used during the tabernacle, and no doubt continued afterwards till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, yet we have no instance of it in scripture during the whole time of the sirst temple: and it is most certain, that it was wholly wanting in the second temple; for a both Ezra and Nehemiah ell us as much. And hence is that saying among the Jews, that the Holy Spirit spake to the children of Israel during the tabernacle by Urim and Thummim, and under the first temple by the prophets, and under the second by b Bath-kol.

They who would have the Urim and Thummim absolutely to have ceased under the first temple, give two reasons for it: 1.

That it was an appendant of the theocracy: for as long as God was the immediate governor of Israel, it was necessary, say they, that a method should be established, whereby he might at all times be applied to and consulted with by his people; and, for this reason, they tell us, the oracle by Urim and Thummim was appointed. But when the theocracy ceased (which, they say, it did, when Solomon the first hereditary king sat upon the throne) this oracle ceased with it. And, 2dly, they say, that the Urim and Thummim was established to ask counsel only about that which belonged to the common interest of all Israel; and therefore.

^a Ezra ii. 63. Neh. vii. 65.

b By this the Jews mean a voice from the clouds, such as was heard from thence concerning our Saviour, Matth. iii. 7. xviii. 5. 2 Pet. i. 17.

^c Spencerus De Urim et Thummim, c. 2. § 2.

therefore, whenever the high priest asked counsel of God this way, it was with the names of all the tribes of Israel upon his breast, to denote that what was asked was for the common interest of all of them. But that common interest ceasing upon the division of the kingdom, this way of asking counsel of God must, in the nature of the thing, have then ceased also, as being no longer practicable. But how far these arguments may conclude, is left to every one to consider.

IV. The fourth thing wanting in the fecond temple, which was in the first, was the holy fire, which came down from heaven upon the altar. 2 It descended first upon the altar in the tabernacle at the confecrating of Aaron and his fons to the prieft. hood, and afterwards it descended askew b upon the altar in the temple of Solomon, at the confecrating of that temple. And there it was couftantly fed and maintained by the priefts day and night, without fuffering it ever to go out, in the fame manneras it had been before in the tabernacle, and with this all the offerings were offered that were made by fire. And for using other fire were Nadab and Abihu confumed by fire from the Lord. This, fay c fome of the Jewish writers, was extinguilhed in the days of Manasseh. But the more general opinion among them is, that it continued till the destruction of the temple by the Chaldeans. After that it was never more restored; but instead of it they had only common fire in the fecond temple. For what is faid of its being d hid in a pit by Jeremiah, and again brought thence, and revived upon the altar in the second temple, is a fable that deferves no regard.

V. The fifth thing wanting in the fecond temple, which was in the first, was the spirit of prophecy. But this was not wholly wanting there: for the prophets Haggai, Zachariah, and Malachi, lived after the second temple was built, and prophesied under it. But on their death, which (fay the Rabbins) happened all in one year, the prophetic spirit wholly ceased from among them.

Besides these five things, there was wanting also a fixth, that is, the boly anointing oil, "which was made by Moses for the anointing and confecrating of the king, the high priest, and all the facred vessels made use of in the house of God. And for this use it was commanded to be kept by the children of israel throughout their generations. And therefore it was laid up before the Lord in the most holy place. And as the original copy of the the law was placed there on the right side of the ark of the covenant;

² Lev. ix. 24.

b 2 Chron. vii. I.

i Talmud in Zebichim, cap. 6.

d 2 Mac. i. 18. 19. c Exod, xxx. 22—33.

covenant; fo perchance the vessel containing this oil was placed on the other fide of it, and there kept, till the first temple being destroyed, that also was destroyed with it. Every a king was not anointed, but only the first of the family: for he being anointed for himself, and all the successors of his race, they needed no other anointing; only if there arose any difficulty or dispute about the succession, then he that obtained it, though of the same family, was anointed anew to put an end to the controverfy, and after that no one was to question the title; and this was the case of Solomon, Joash, and Jehoahaz. every high priest was anointed at his confectation, or first admission to the office, and so also was a the priest that went in his flead to the wars. The veffels and utenfils that were anointed were the d ark of the covenant, the altar of incense, the shew-bread table, the golden candlestick, the altar of burntofferings, the laver, and all the other veffels and utenfils belonging to them. And as by this c anointing they were first confecrated at the erecting of the tabernacle, by Moses, so in case any of them were afterwards decayed, destroyed, or lost, they could, as long as this anointing oil remained, be again restored, by making and confectating new ones in their place, of the fame virtue and holiness with the former. But this being wanting in the fecond temple, the want hereof caused a want of fanctity in all things else belonging to it: for although, on the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, and the rebuilding of their temple, they did a-new make an ark, an altar of incense, a shew-bread table, a golden candlestick, an altar of burnt-offerings, and a laver, with the other vessels and utenfils belonging to them, and did put them all in their former places, and applied them to their former uses; yet, through want of the holy anointing oil to confecrate them, these all wanted that holiness under the fecond temple, which they had under the first; and their high prieft, who officiated in that temple, was no otherwise confecrated, than f by the putting on of his vestments. the want of this one thing only in the fecond temple, caused a great want and defect in all things else that were therein; every thing in it falling short of its former holiness by reason hereof. And therefore this anointing oil might well, under the fecond temple, have been reckoned among the principal things that were wanting in it. But the Jews superstitiously confine themselves

² Maimonides in Cele Hammikdash, c. 1. § 11.

b Exod. xxx. 30.

^c Maimonides in Cele Hammikdash, c. 1. § 7.

d Exod xxx. 26-29.

^{*} Exod. xl.

f Maimonides in Cele Hammikdash, c. 1. § 8.

to the number of five particulars in this reckoning. For, in the 8th verse of the first chapter of Haggai, where God saith of the fecond temple, I will take pleasure in it, and will be glorified, the Hebrew word Aicabedba, i. e. I will be glorified, being written without the letter he at the end of it, which it ought to have been written with, they make a mystery of it, as a if this letter (which is the numerical letter for five) were there left out for this purpose, that the want of it might denote the five things of the first temple that were wanting in the fecond; and therefore will not add a fixth. But, however, there are some among them, who, to make room for it, contract the Shechinah and the fpirit of prophecy under one and the fame head, and, instead of them two (which are two of the particulars above mentioned), put the Holy Spirit, as reckoning them no other than different manifestations of the same Holy Spirit of God, the one in a place, and the other in a person, and thereby, without altering the number of five in the reckoning up of these defects, have given the holy anointing oil a place among them; and therefore name them 2 as followeth. I. The ark of the covenant, with the mercy-feat; 2. The holy fire; 3. The Urim and Thummim; 4. The holy anointing oil; and, 5. The Holy Spirit. And thefe, as well as many other particulars of the glory of the first temple, being wanting in the fecond, there was reason enough for those to weep at the rebuilding of the fecond temple who remembered the first. But all these wants and defects were abundantly repaired in the fecond temple, b when the defire of all nations, the Lord, whom they fought, came to this his temple, and Christ our Saviour, who was the truest Shechinah of the divine majetly, honoured it with his prefence: and, in this respect, the glory of the latter house did far exceed the glory of the former house. And herein the prophecies of the prophet Haggai, c which foretold it should be so, had a very full and thorough completion.

The Samaritans, hearing that the Jews had begun to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem, came d thither, and, An. 534. expressing a great desire of being admitted to worship God at the same temple in joint communion with them, offered to join with them in building of it; telling them, that, ever since the days of Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, they had worshipped the same God that they did. But Zerubbabel and Jeshua, and the rest of the elders of Israel, made answer to them, that they, not being of the feed of Israel, had nothing to do to build a temple to their God with them; that Cy-

² Talmud Hierofol. in Taanith, c. 2.

L Mal. iii. 1. Hag. ii. 7.

c Hag. ii. 9.

rus's commission being only to those of the house of Israel, they would keep themselves exactly to that, and, according to the tenor of it, build the house to the Lord their God themselves, without admitting any other with them into the work. The reason of this answer was, they saw they intended not sincerely what they faid, but came with an infidious defign to get an opportunity, by being admitted among them, of doing them mifchief. And, besides, they were not truly of their religion: for although, from the time that they had been infelled with lions in the days of Esarhaddon, they had worshipped the God of Israel; vet it was only a in conjunction with their other gods, whom they worshipped before, and therefore, notwithstanding their worship of the true God, since they worshipped false gods too at the same time, they were in this respect idolaters: and this was reason enough for the true worshippers of God to have no communion with them. At which the Samaritans being much incenfed, they did all they could to hirder the work; and although they could not alter Cyrus's decree, yet b they prevailed, by bribes and underhand dealings with his ministers, and other officers concerned herein, to put obstructions to the execution of it, so that for several years the building went but very flowly on; which the Jews refenting, according as it deferved, this became the beginning of that bitter rancour which hath ever fince been between them and the Samaritans; which, being improved by other causes, grew at length to that height, that nothing became more odious to a Jew than a Samaritan; of which we have feveral inflances in the gospels; and so it still continues. For, even to this day, a Cuthean (that is, a Samaritan) in their language, is the most odious name among them, and that which, in the height of their anger, by way of infamy and reproach, they bestow on those they most hate and abominate. And by this they commonly call us Christians, when they would express the bitterest of their hatred against us.

By these underhand and subdulous dealings, the work of the temple being much retarded, and Cyrus's decree in many particulars deseated of its effect, this seems to have been the cause, that, in the third year of Cyrus, is the first month of that year, Daniel did give himself up to mourning and fasting for three weeks together. After this, on the 24th day of that month, he saw the vision concerning the succession of the kings of Persia, the empire of the Macedonians, and the conquests of the Romans; of which the three last chapters of his prophecies contain an account. And, by what is written in the conclusion of the last of them, he seems to have died soon after; and his great age makes it not likely that he could have furvived much longer. For the third of Cyrus being the 73d year of his captivity, if he were 18 years old at his carrying to Babylon (as I have shewn before, is the least that can be supposed), he must have been in the orft year of his age at this time; which was a length of years given to few in those days. He was a very extraordinary person both in wisdom and piety, and was favoured of God, and honoured of men, beyond any that had lived in his time. His prophecies concerning the coming of the Messiah, and other great events of after-times, are the clearest and the fullest of all that we have in the holy scriptures, infomuch that a Porphyry, in his objections against them, faith, they must have been written after the facts were done: for it feems they rather appeared to him to be a narration of matters afore transacted, than a prediction of things to come; fo great an agreement was there between the facts, when accomplished, and the prophecies which foretold them. But, notwithstanding all this, b the Jews do not reckon him to be a prophet; and therefore place his prophecies only among the Hagiographa: and they ferve the pfalms of David after the fame rate. The c reason which they give for it in respect of both is, that they lived not the prophetic manner of life, but the courtly; David in his own palace, as king of Israel, and Daniel in the palace of the king of Babylon, as one of his chief counsellors and ministers in the government of that empire. And, in respect of Daniel, they further add, d that, although he had divine revelations delivered unto him, yet it was not in the prophetic way, but by dreams and visions of the night, which they reckon to be the most imperfect manner of revelation, and below the prophetic. But e Josephus, who was one of the ancientest writers of that nation, reckons him among the greatest of the prophets; and fays further of him, that he had familiar converse with God, and did not only foretell future events, as other prophets did, but also determined the time, when they should come to pass; and that, whereas other prophets only foretold evil things, and thereby drew on them the ill-will both of princes and people, Daniel was a prophet of good things to come, and, by the good report which his predictions

^{* 2} Kings xvii. 3. b Ezra iv. 5. Joseph. Ant. lib. 12. c. 4: CDan he

^a Hieronymus in Procemio ad Comment. in Danielem.

b Hieronymi Præfatio in Danielem. Maimonides in Moreh Nevo-chim. part 2. c. 45.

Vide Grotium in Præfatione ad Comment, in Essiam, et Huetii demonstrationem Evangelicum, prop. 4. c. 14. § de propheta Danielis.

d Maimonides, ibid. David Kimchi in Præfatione ad Comment. in Pfelmos.

^{*} Antiq. lib. 10. C. 12.

predictions carried with them on this account, reconciled to himself the good will of all men. And the event of such of them as were accomplished, procured to the rest a thorough belief of their truth, and a general opinion that they came from God. But what makes most for this point with us, against all that contradict it, our Saviour Christ acknowledgeth Daniel to be a prophet; for a he so styles him in the gospel. And this is a sufficient decision of this matter.

But Daniel's wisdom reached not only to things divine and political, but also to arts and sciences, and particularly to that of architecture. And b Josephus tells us of a famous edifice built by him at Sufa in the manner of a caftle (which he faith was remaining to his time), and finished with such wonderful art, that it then seemed as fresh and beautiful, as if it had been newly built. Within this edifice, he faith, was the place where the Persian and Parthian kings used to be buried; and that, for the fake of the founder, the keeping of it was committed to one of the Jewish nation, even to his time. The copies of Josephus that are now extant, do indeed place this building in Echatana in Media; but c St Jerome, who gives us the same account of it word for word out of Josephus, and professeth so to do, placeth it in Susa in Persia; which makes it plain, that the copy of Jofephus, which he made use of, had it so: and it is most likely to have been the true reading; for Sufa being within the Babylonish empire, the scripture tells us, that Daniel had sometimes his refidence d there; and the common tradition of those parts hath been for many ages past, that Daniel died in that city, which is now called Tufter, and there they shew his monument even to this day. And it is to be observed, that Josephus calls this building Baris, which is the same name by which Daniel himself calls the castle or palace at Shushan or Susa. For what we translate, f at Shushan in the palace, is, in the original, Beshushan Habirah, where, no doubt, the Birab of Daniel is the fame with the Baris of Josephus; and both fignify this palace or castle there built by Daniel, while he was governor of that province: for g there he did the king's bufinefs, i. e. was governor for the king of Babylon.

Part of the book of Daniel is originally written in the Chaldee language, that is, from the 4th verse of the 2d chapter to the end of the 7th chaper: for there the holy prophet treating of Babylonish affairs, he wrote of them in the Chaldee or Babylonish language.

a Matth. xxiv. 15.

⁶ Antiq. lib. 10. c. 12. Comment. in Dan. viii. 2.

d Sufa, or Shufhan.

[·] Benjaminis Itinirarium.

f Dan. viii. 2.

³ Dan. viii. 27.

language. All the rest is in Hebrew. The a Greek translation of this book, used by the Greek churches, through all the eaftern countries, was that which was translated by Theodotion. In the yulgar Latin edition of the Bible, there is added in the 3d chapter, after the 23d verse, between that and the 24th verse, the fong of the three children; and, at the end of the book, the history of Sufanna, and of Bel and the Dragon; and the former is made the 13th and the other the 14th chapter of the book in that edition. But these additions b were never received into the canon of holy writ by the Jewish church; neither are they extant either in the Hebrew, or the Chaldee language; nor is there any evidence that they ever were fo. That there are Hebraisms in them can prove no more, than that they were written by an Hebrew in the Greek tongue, who transferred the idioms of his own tongue into that which he wrote in, as is usual in this cafe. And that they were thus originally written in the Greek tongue by fome hellenistical Jew, without having any higher fountain from whence they are derived, appears from this, that in the history of Susanna, Daniel, in his replies to the elders, alludes c to the Greek names of the trees, under which, they faid, the adultery, which they charged Sufanna with, was committed; which allusions cannot hold good in any other language. However the church of Rome allows them to be of the fame authority with the rest of the book of Daniel, and, by their decree d at Trent, having given them an equal place with it among the canonical feriptures. But the ancients never did fo. Africanus, Eusebius, and Appolinarius, have rejected those pieces, not only as being uncanonical, but also as fabulous; and e Jerome gives the history of Bel and the Dragon no better title than that t of the fables of Bel and the Dragon. And others who have been content to admit them for instruction of manners, have yet rejected them from being parts of the canonical scripture:

^a Hieronymus in Præfatione ad Danielem et in Proæmio ad Comment. in eundem.

b Hieronymus ibid.

^c In the examination of the elders, when one of them faid, That he faw the adultery committed έπο σχίνον, i. e. under a maffich tree, Daniel answers in allution to σχίνον, The angel of God hath received fentence of God σχίσαι σε μέσον, i. e. to cut thee in 1200. And when the other elder faid it was επό πρίνοι, i. e. under an holm tree, Daniel answers in allution to the word πρίνον, The angel of the Lord quairth quith the favord πρίσαι σε μέσον, i. e. to cut thee in two. Vide Hieron, ibid.

d Seffione, 4ta.

c Hieronymus, ibid.

f Peter Comestor doth also so call them, as doth likewise Erasmus in Scol, super Fræs, Hieronymi in Danielem.

ture; whom the Protestant churches following herein, do give them a place in their Bibles among the apocrypnal writings, but allow them not to be canonical.

In the death of Daniel, the Jews having loft a powerful advocate in the Persian court, this gave their enemies the greater advantage of succeeding in their designs against them. But although they prevailed by underhand dealings to divert those encouragements which Cyrus had ordered for the carrying on of the work, yet they could not put an open ftop to it. So that, as far as the Jews of themselves were able, they still carried on the work; in which they were much helped by a the Tyrians and the Zidonians, not only in furnishing them with masons, and other workmen and artificers, but chiefly in bringing the cedars, which Cyrus had given them, out of the forest of mount Libanus, from thence to Joppa by fea; from which place they were carried by land to Jerufalem. For the Tyrians and Zidonians, being wholly given to traffic and navigation, did very little addict themselves to the planting of olive-yards, or vineyards, or the tillage of the ground; neither had they indeed any territory for either: for their gain being very great by fea, they did not fet themfelves to make any enlargements by land, but were in a manner pent up within the narrow precincts of the cities in which they dwelt; and therefore, having very little of corn, wine, or oil of their own, they depended mostly on their neighbours for these provifions; from whom they had them either for their money, or by way of barter and exchange for other commodities, which they supplied them with, and they were mostly furnished this b way out of the Jews country, and therefore they readily assisted them with their labour and shipping, to be supplied with these necesfaries in exchange for it. So that as it was by their help that Solomon built the first temple; so also was it by their help that the Jews were enabled to build the fecond.

In the 7th year after the reftoration of the Jews c died Cyrus, their great benefactor, after he had reigned, from his first taking on him the command of the Persian and Median armies, d 30 years; from his taking of Babylon c nine years; and from his being sole monarch of the East, after the death of Cyaxares, or Darius the Median, his uncle, seven f years, being at the time of his death f 70 years old. There are different accounts of the manner of his death. 3 Herodotus, a Ezra iii. 7.

b Acts xii. 20.

Cyropedia, lib. 8.

Cicero de Divinatione, lib. 1.

e Can. Ptolemæi.

f Cyropedia, lib. %.

g Lib. 1.

rodotus a Diodorus Siculus, and b Justin, tell us, that, having invaded the Scythians, he was there cut off with all his army, confifting of 200,000 men. But c Xenophon makes him die in his bed as fortunately as he lived, amidst his friends, and in his own country: and this is by much the more probable account of the two; for it is by no means likely that so wife a man as Cyrus, and fo advanced in years as he then was, should engage in fo rash an undertaking, as that Scythian expedition is defcribed to be by those who tell us of it. Neither can it be conceived, how, after fuch a blow, his new erected empire could have been upheld, especially in the hards of such a successor as Cambyfes was, or how it could be possible, that he should so foon after it be in a condition to wage fuch a war as he did with the Egyptians, and make fuch an absolute conquest of that country as he did. That fuch a wild-headed man could fettle himfelf fo eafily in his father's new-erected empire, and hold it in fuch quiet at home, and, fo foon after his coming to it, enlarge it, with fuch conquests abroad, could certainly be owing to nothing elfe, but that it was founded in the highest wisdom, and left to him in the highest tranquillity. Besides, all authors agree, that Cyrus d was buried at Pafargada in Persia; in which country, Xenophou faith, he died, and his monument there continued to the time of Alexander. But if he had been flain in Scythia, and his body there mangled by way of indignity to it, in fuch a manner as Herodotus and Justin do relate, how can we suppose it could ever have been brought thence out of the hands of those enraged barbarians to be buried at Pafargada?

This Cambyfes, who fucceeded his father Cyrus, is e in fcripture called Ahafuerus. As foon as he was Anno 529. fettled in the throne, the enemies of the Jewsknow-Cambyfes 1. ing him to be of a temper fit to be worked upon for the doing of mischief, instead of opposing the Jews in their building of the temple by fecret machinations, and underhand dealings with the ministers of the court, and other subordinate officers, as they had hitherto done, they now openly addressed to the king himself to put a stop to the work. But it seems he had so much respect for the memory of his father, that he could not be induced publicly to revoke his decree. However, he otherwise defeated in a great measure the defign of it, by several discouragements which he put upon it; fo that the work went but heavily all his reign.

Cambyses

² Lib. 2. p. 90.

² Lib. 1. c. 8.

Cyropedia, lib. 8.
Strabo, lib. 15. p. 730. Plu-tarchus in vita Alexandri, Q. Curtius, Arrianus, aliique.

e Ezra iv. 6.

Cambyses had not long been king, ere a he refolved upon a war with the Egyptians, by reason of some offence taken against Amasis their king.

Anno 528.
Cambyses 2.

Herodotus tells us, it was because Amasis, when he desired of him one of his daughters to wife, fent him a daughter of Apries. instead of one of his own. But this could not be true, because Apries having been dead above 40 years before, no daughter of his could be young enough at that time to be acceptable to Cambyses. They speak with more probability, b who say, it was Cyrus, and not Cambyfes, to whom this daughter of Apries was fent. Her name, they fay, was Nitetis; and for some time she concealed her true parentage, and was content to go for the daughter of Amasis. But, at length, having had several children by Cyrus, and fully secured herself in his favour and affection. the discovered to him the whole truth of the matter, and excited him all the could to revenge upon Amasis her father's wrong; which he intended to have done, as foon as his other affairs would have permitted; but, dying before he could execute his intentions, Cambyfes (who they fay was her fon) undertook the quarrel on her account, and made this war upon Egypt for no other reason than to revenge upon Amasis the case of Apries. But it is most likely, that whereas Amasis had subjected himself to Cyrus, and become his tributary, he did on his death withdraw his obedience from his fucceffor, and that this was the true cause of the war; for c the carrying on whereof Cambyses made great preparations both by fea and land. For the feafervice, he engaged the Cypriots and the Phoenicians to help him with their fleets; and for the war by land, belides his other forces, he had a great number of Greeks, Ionians, and Æolians, in his army, who were the main strength of it. But the greatest help he had in this war, was from Phanes, an Halicarnassian, who being a commander of some of the Grecian auxiliaries that were in the fervice of Amasis, on some disgust given him, revolted to Cambyles, and made those discoveries to him, of the nature of the country, the firength of the enemy, and the then flate of their affairs, as chiefly conduced to the making of that expedition successful. And it was by his advice, that Cambyses contracted with the Arabian king that lay next the borders of Palestine and Egypt, to supply him with water, while he passed the deferts that lay between these two countries; where accordingly it was brought him on camels backs; without which he could never have marched his army that way. Being there-

² Herodotus, lib. 2. Justin lib. 2. c. 9. Athenaus, lib. 13. p. 560. p Polyanus Stratagem, lib 8. et

Ægyptii apud Herodotum, lib. 3. in initio Athenæus, ibid.
c Herodotus, lib. 3.

fore thus prepared, he invaded Egypt in the fourth year of his reign. On his arrival on the borders, he found An. 526. Amasis was newly dead, and that Psammenitus his Cambyses 4. fon, being made king in his flead, was drawing together a great army to oppose him. To make his passage open into the country, it was necessary for him to take Pelusium, which was as the key of Egypt on that fide. But that being a ftrong place, it was like to give him much trouble: for the preventing hereof by the counfel, it is supposed of Phanes, he had recourse to this stratagem. ² Finding that the garrifon were all Egyptians, in an affault, which he made upon the city, he placed a great number of cats, dogs, sheep, and other of those animals, which the Egyptians reckoned facred, in the front of the army; and therefore the foldiers, not daring to throw a dart, or shoot an arrow that way, for fear of killing some of those animals, Cambyfes made himfelf mafter of the place without any opposition: for these being the gods which the Egyptians then adored, b it was reckoned the highest impiety to kill any of them, and, when they died of themselves, they buried them with the greatest solemnity. By the time that Cambyses had taken this place, c Psammenitus came up with his army to oppose his farther progress; whereon ensued a bloody battle between them. At the beginning of it, the Greeks that were in Flammenitus's army, to be revenged on Phanes for his revolt to the enemy, brought forth his children (whom he was forced to leave behind him on his flight), and flew them in the front of the battle, in the fight of both armies, and drunk their blood. But this ferved them not in any stead for the victory: for the Perfians, being exasperated by a spectacle of so horrid a nature, tell on with fuch fury and rage to revenge it, that they foon vanquished and overthrew the whole Egyptian army, and cut the greatest part of them in pieces. The remainder fled to Memphis; where Cambyses pursuing them, on his arrival thither, fent into the city by the Nile, on which it stood, a ship of Mitylene, with an herald to fummon them to a furrender; but the people rifing on him, in their rage flew the herald, and tore him and all that were with him to pieces. But Cambyfes, after a flort tiege, having taken the place, fufficiently revenged their death, caufing ten Egyptians of the first rank to be publicly executed for every one of those that were thus flain; and the eldest son of Pfammenitus was one of the number. As to Pfammenitus himfelf, Cambyles was inclined to have dealt kindly with him: for at first he gave him his life, and allowed him wherewith ho-

"Herodotus, lib. 3.

Polymaus, lib. 7.

b Herodotus, lib. 2. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 1. p. 52.

againA

nourably to live; but he not being contented herewith, endeavoured to raife new troubles for the recovery of his crown; whereon he was forced to drink bulls blood, and fo ended his life. His reign was only fix months. For fo much time only intervened from the death of his father to the taking of Memphis; when he fell into the hands of the enemy, and all his power ceafed; for hereon all Egypt fubmitted to Cambyfes.

This happened in the fifth year of his reign; and Cambyfes; he reigned three years after. The Libyans, Cyrenians, and Barceans. hearing of this fuccess, fent ambassadors nians, and Barceaus. hearing of this success, sent ambassadors with presents to make their submission to him. From Memphis he went to Sais, where the Egyptian kings, for several descents past, had kept their usual residence; and there, entering into the palace, caused the body of Amass to be dug up out of his grave, and, after all manner of indignities had been offered thereto in his presence, he ordered it to be cast into the fire and burnt. Which rage against the carcase, sheweth the anger which he had against the man; and, whatsoever it was that provoked it, this seems to be the cause that brought him into Egypt.

The next year, which was the 6th of his reign, he defigued three expeditions, the first against the Carthaginians, the second against the Hammonians, and the Cambyses 6.

third against the Ethiopians. But, the Phænicians refusing to assist him against the Carthaginians, who were defcended from them (they being a colony of the Tyrians), and not being able to carry on that war without them, he was forced to drop this project. But, his heart being intent upon the other two, he sent ambassadors into Ethiopia, who, under that name, were to serve him as spies, to learn and bring him an account of the state and strength of the country. But the Ethiopians, being fully apprifed of the end of their coming, treated them with great contempt. And the Ethiopian king, in return for the present they brought him from Cambyses, sent him back only his bow, advising him then to make war upon the Ethiopians, when the Persians could as easily draw that bow as they could; and in the mean time to thank the gods, that they never infpired the Ethiopians with a defire of extending their dominions beyond the limits of their own country. With which answer Cambyses being exceedingly exasperated, immediately on the receipt of it, in a mad irrational humour, commanded his army forthwith to march (without confidering, that they were furnished neither with provisions nor any other necessaries for such an expedition \, leaving only the Grecian auxiliaries behind, to keep the country in awe during his absence. On his coming to Thebes, in the Upper Egypt, he detached from his army 50,000 men to go against the Hammonial, with orders to destroy their country, and burn the temple of Jupiter Hammon that flood in it. But, after feveral days match over the deferts, a ftrong and impetuous wind beginning to blow from the fouth, at the time of their dinner, raifed the fands to fuch a degree, and brought them in fuch a torrent upon them, that the whole army was overwhelmed thereby, and perished. In the interim Cambyses madly marched on with the rest of the army against the Ethiopians, though he wanted all manner of provisions for their sublistence, till at length, they having eaten up all their beafts of burden, they came to feed upon each other, fetting out every tenth man by lot for this purpose. By this Cambyses being convinced, that it was time for him to return, marched back his army to Thebes, after having loft a great part of it in this wild expedition; and from thence returned to Memphis; when he came thither, he ditinified all the Greeks to their respective homes; but, on his entry into the city, finding it all in mirth and jollity, because their god Apis had then appeared among them, he fell into a great rage, supposing all this rejoicing to have been for the ill success of his affairs. And, when he called the magistrates, and they gave him a true account of the matter, he would not believe them; but caused them to be put to death, as imposing a lie upon him. And then he fent for the priests, who made him the same answer, telling, him that their god, having manifested himself unto them (which feldom happened), it was always their custom to celebrate his appearance with the greatest demonstrations of joy that they could express. To this he replied, that if their god was so kind and familiar as to appear among them, he would be acquainted with him; and therefore commanded them forthwith to bring him unto him.

The chief god of the Egyptians was a Osiris, him they worshipped in the shape of a bull, and that not only in imagery, but also in reality. For they kept a bull in the temple of Osiris, which they worshipped in his stead. At Heliopolis he was called Mnevis, at Memphis, Apis. The marks of Apis b were these His body was to be all black, excepting a square spot of white on his forehead. He was also to have the sigure of an eagle, say some, of an half moon say others, on his back, a double list of hair on his tail, and a scarabæus or knot under his tongue. When they had sound such an one, they brought him with great rejoicing to the temple of Osiris, and there kept him, and worshipped him for that god, as long as he lived; and when he was dead, they buried him with great folemnity, and then fought for another with the fame marks, which fometimes it was many years ere they could find; and fuch a one they having found, on Cambyfes's return to Memphis from his Ethiopic expedition, this was the reason of their great rejoicing at that time. And, in imitation of this idolarry was it, that Aaron made the golden calf in the wilderness, and Jeroboam those in Dan and Bethel, and did set them up there to be worshipped by the children of Israel, as the gods that had brought them out of the land of Egypt.

ticad,

a Herodotus, lib. 2. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 1.

b Herodotus, lib. 3. Plin. lib. 2. c. 46. Solinus, c. 35. Ammianus Marcellinus, c. 22.

This Apis being brought to Cambyses, he fell into a rage, as well he might, at the fight of such a god, and drawing out his dagger, run it into the thigh of the beast; and then, reproaching the priests for their stupidity and wretchedness in worshipping a brute for a god, ordered them severely to be whipped, and all the Egyptians in Memphis to be slain that should be found any more rejoicing there on this occasion. The Apis being carried back to the temple, there languished of his wound, and died.

The Egyptians fay, that, after this act (which they reckon to have been the highest instance of impiety that was ever found among them), Cambyses was stricken with madness. But his actions shewed him to have been mad long before; of which he continued to give divers instances. They tell us of thefe following.

He had a brother, the only fon of Cyrus besides himself, and born of the fame mother; his name, according to Xenophon, was Tanoaxares, but Herodotus calls him Smerdis, and Justin, Mergis. He accompanied Cambyfes in his Egyptian expedition; but being the only person among all the Persians that could draw the bow which Cambyses's ambassadors brought him from the Ethiopian king, Cambyses from hence contracted such an envy against him, that he could no longer bear him in the army, but fent him back into Persia. And not long after dreaming, that One came, and told him, that Smerdis fat on the throne, he thereon suspecting of his brother what was afterwards sulfilled by another of his name, fent after him, into Persia, Prexaspes, one of his chiefest confidents, with orders to put him to death; which he accordingly executed. And when one of his fifters, who was with him in the camp, on the hearing of it, lamented his death, he gave her fuch a blow with his foot in the belly, that she died She was the youngest of his fisters, and, being a very beautiful woman, he fell violently in love with her, fo that nothing could fatisfy him, but that he must have her to wife; whereon he called together all the royal judges of the Persian nation, to whom the interpretation of their laws did belong, to know Vol. I.

know of them whether they had any law that would allow it. They being unwilling to authorife any fuch incestuous marriage, and at the same time fearing his violent temper, should they contradict him herein, they gave him this crafty answer: That they had no law indeed that permitted a brother to marry lie fifter; but they had a law which allowed the king of Perfecto do what he pleafed. Which ferving his purpose as well as a direct approbation of the thing, he folemnly married her; and hereby gave the first example to that incest which was afterwards practifed by wost of his successors, and by some of them carried fo far, as to marry their own daughters. This lady he carried with him in all his expeditions; and her name being Meroe, he from her gave a that name to the island in the Nile between Egypt and Ethiopia, on the conquering of it, which, in all our maps of the old geography, it still bears (for fo far he advanced in his wild march against the Ethiopians). And the being with child by him, when he ftruck her, the blow caused an abortion; and of this she died. And fo vile a marriage deferved no better an end. He caufed alfo feveral of the principal of his followers to be buried alive, without any cause deserving of it, and daily sacrificed some or other of them to his wild fury. And when Cræfus advifed him against these proceedings, and laid before him the ill confequences which they would lead to, he ordered him to be put 10 death. And when those who received his orders, knowing he would repent of it the next day, did therefore defer the execution, he canfed them all to be executed for it, because they had not obeyed his commands; although at the fame time he expreffed great joy that Creefus was alive. And, out of a mere humour only, to flow his skill in archery, he shot to death a In of Prexames, who was the chief of his favourites. And in fuch wild actions he wore out the 7th year of his reign.

In the beginning of the 8th year, he left Egypt, and returned towards Perfia. On his coming into Syria, he there met with an herald, who, being feat from Shufhan, came into the army, and there proclaimed Smerdis, the fon of Gyru, king, and commanded all men to obey him. The meaning of this was, Cambyfes, when he departed from Shufhan on the Egyptian expedition, placed there in the fupreme government of his affairs, during his abfence, Patizithes, one of the chief of the Magians. This Patizithes had a brother, who did very much refemble Smerdisthe fon of Cyrus, and was (for that reason perchance) called by the fame name. As from as he had been fully informed of the death of that prince (which

² Strabo, lib. 17. p. 790. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 2. c. 10.

(which had been concealed from most others), and found that the extravagancies of Cambyles were grown to an height no longer to be borne, he placed this brother of his on the throne, giving out that he was the true Smerdis the fon of Cyrus; and forthwith fent out heralds into all parts of the empire to give notice hereof, and command obedience to be paid unto him. Cambyfes having feized him that came with this meffage to the army, on the examining of him, and on the examining of Prexaspes, whom he had sent to kill his brother, found, that the true Smerdis was certainly dead, and that this was none other than Smerdis the Magian, who had invaded the throne; whereon, much lamenting that he had been led by the identity of the name to murder his brother, he gave orders for his army forthwith to fet forward to suppress the usurper; but as he mounted his horse for the march, his fword falling out of the feabbard, gave him a wound in the thigh, of which he died in a few days after. The Egyptians remarking, that it was in the same part of the body where he had afore wounded the Apis, reckoned it as an especial judgement from heaven upon him for that fact, and perchance they were not much out in it; for it feldom happened, in an affront given to any particular mode of worship, how erroneous soever it may be, but that religion is in general wounded hereby. There are many inflances in hiftory wherein God hath very fignally punished the profanations of religion in the worst of times, and under the worst modes of heathen idolatry. While he was in Egypt, having confulted the oracle of Butus in that country, he was told that he thould die at Echatana; which understanding of Echatana in Media, he refolved to preferve his life by never going thither. But what he thought to avoid in Media he found in Syria: for the town where he lay fick of this wound. was of the same name, being also called Ecbatana; a of which when he was informed, taking it for certain, that he must there die, he called for all the chief of the Persians together;

There are many inflances of fuch, who, on their over-curious inquiry into their future fate, have been in the fame manner deceived. Thus Henry IV. of England, being foretold that he should die at Jerufalem, was suddenly taken sick in the abbot of Westminster's house, and died there in Jerufalem chamber. And so Fercinand the Catholic, king of Spain, being foretold, that he should die at Madrigal, carefully avoided going thither. But while he was thus, as he thought, avoiding his death, he found it at Madrigalejo, or Lattle Madrigal, a poor little village he had never before beard of. For as he was accidentally passing through it, he was suddenly taken ill; and, being carried into a pook cottage, the best reception the place could essentially he died theres in an note fearce large enough to receive his bed.

' and acquainting them with the true state of the case, that his brother was certainly dead, and that it was Smerdis the Magian that then reigned, earnefly exhorted them not to fubmit to the cheat, and thereby permit the fovereignty to pass from the Persians again to the Medes, of which nation the Magian was; but to take care to fet up a king over them of their own people. But the Perfians thinking all this was faid by him out of hatred to his brother, had no regard to it; but, on his death, quietly submitted to him whom they found on the throne, supposing him to be the true Smerdis. And it being the usage of the eattern kings in those times, to live retired in their palaces, and there transact all their affairs by the intercourse of their eunuchs, without admitting any elfe, unless those of their highest confidence, to have access to them, the Magian exactly observed this conduct; and therefore being never seen in publie, this made it the harder for them to discover the cheat.

Cambyfes reigned a feven years and five months: the remaining feven months of the 8th year was the reign of the Magian. Herodotus calls him Smerdis, (as hath been already iaid), Æschylus, Mardus, Ctesias, Spendadates, and Justin, Orapastes, but in the scripture he is called b Artaxerxes. As foon as he was fettled in the kingdom, after the death of Cambyfes, the Samaritans c wrote a letter to him, fetting forth, that the Jews were rebuilding their city and temple at Jerufalem; that they having been always a rebellious people, there was reason to suspect, that, as soon as they should have finished that work, they would withdraw their obedience from the king, and pay no more toll nor tribute; which might give an occasion for all Syria and Palestine to revolt alfo, and the king be excluded from having any more portion on that fide the river Euphrates. And, for the truth of what they had informed him of, as to the rebellious temper of that people, they referred him to the records of his predeceffors, wherein they defired fearch might be made concerning this matter. the receipt of this letter, examination being made, according to the purport of it, into the records of former times concerning the behaviour of the Jews under the Affyrian and Babylonish empires; and it being found in them with what valour they had long defended themselves, and with what difficuity they were at length reduced by Nebuchadnezzar, an order was iffued forth to prohibit them from proceeding any further, and fent to the Sanaritans to fee it put in execution; who immediately, on the receipt hereof, went up to Jerufalem, and having exhibited their order to the Jews made them defift by a Herodotus, lib. 3.

SCOK III

force and power from going on any farther with the work of the house; so it wholly ceased till the second year of Darius king of Persia, for about the space of two years. The king that now reigned having been a chief leader of the sect of the Magians, against whom the Jews were in the utmost opposition in point of religion, the aversion he had to them on this account, no doubt, surthered this decree against them.

That Cambyses was the Ahasuerus, and Smerdis the Artanerus, that obstructed the work of the temple, is plain from hence, that they are said a in scripture to be the kings of Persia, that reigned between the time of Cyrus, and the time of that Darius by whose decree the temple was sinished; but that Darius being Darius Hystaspis (as will be unanswerably demonstrated in its proper place), and none reigning between Cyrus and that Darius in Persia, but Cambyses and Smerdis, it must follow from hence, that none but Cambyses and Smerdis could be the Ahasuerus and Artanerus who are said in Ezra to have put a stop to this work.

But though Smerdis was thus unkind to the Jews, b he fludied to shew grace and favour to all others, that so, gaining their affections, he might the better fecure himself in the possession of the throne which he had usurped. And therefore, as foon as he had taken on him the fovereignty, he granted to all his fubjects a freedom from taxes, and an immunity from all military fervices for three years; and also did so many other things for their benefit, as made his death to be very much lamented by a great many of them on the change that after followed. And farther, to fecure himfelf, he took to wife Atoffa the daughter of Cyrus, aiming thereby to hold the empire by her title, if in case of a discovery he could not be allowed to have any of his own! She had before been the wife of Cambyfes: for, after he had, upon the decision above mentioned, married one of his fifters, he took this other to wife also. And the Magian, while he pretended to be her brother, married her on the same foot.

But these steps which he took for his security, made it the more suspected that he was not the true Smerd's; for if he were, there would have been no need (it was stid) of using all these and precautions for his establishment in the empire. And the care which he took never to be seen in public augmented the suspection. To be fully satisfied in this matter, Otanes a noble Persian, brother of Casiandana (who is said by Herodotus to have been mother to Cambyses, and the true Smerdis's brother) having a daughter named Phedyma, that had been one of Cambyses's wives, and was now kept by the Magian in the same quality, sent to her to know, whether it were Smerdis the fon of Cyrus Magian in the same quality.

² Ezra iv. 5-7. b Herodotus, l'b. 3.

that she lay with, or else some other man. The answer which fhe returned was, that she having never seen Smerdis the son of Gyaus, she could not tell. He then, by a second message, bid her inquire of Atoffa (who could not but know her own brother) whether this were he or no? whereon she having informed him, that the present king kept all his wives apart, so that they never converfed with each other, and that therefore she could not come at Atoffa to ask this question of her; he fent her a third message, whereby he directed her, that when he should next lie with her, the should take the opportunity, while he slept, to feel whether he had any ears or no: for Cyrus baving caused the ears of Smerdis the Magian to be cut off for fome crime that deferved it, he told her, that if the person she lay with had ears, she might fatisfy herfelf, that he was Smerdis the fon of Cyrus; but that if the found it was otherwise, he was certainly Smerdis the Magian, and therefore unworthy of possessing either the crown or her. Phedyma, having received these instructions, took the next opportunity of making the trial she was directed to; and finding hereon, that the person she lay with had no ears, she sent word to her father of it, and hereby the whole fraud became detected. Whereon Otanes, taking to him fix other of the nobility of the Persians, entered into the palace, and there falling on the usurper, and his brother Patizithes, who had been the contriver of the whole plot, flew them both; and then bringing out their heads to the people, declared unto them the whole imposture. Which did set them into such a rage, that they fell on the whole feet which the impostor was of, and slew all of them that they met with that day. For which reason the said day on which this was done, thenceforth became an annual festival among them; and, for a long while after, it was celebrated every year by the Persians in commemoration of the discovery of this imposture, and their deliverance from it. And by reason of the great stanghter of the Magians then made, it was called Magofonia, or the flaughter-day of the Magians. And it was from this time that they first had the name of Magians; which rignifying the Cropt-ear'd, it was then given unto them by way of nick-name and contempt, because of this impostor, who was thus cropped. For mige-gush fignified, in the language of the country then in use, one that had his ears cropped; and, 2 from a ringleader of that felt who was thus cropped, the author of the famous Arabic Lexicon, called Camus, tells us, they had all this name given unto them. And what Herodotus, and Justin, and other authors, write of this Smerdis, plainly flews, that he was the man. After this the whole feet of the Magians grew into that that contempt, that they would foon have funk into an utter extinction, but that a few years after it was, under the name of a reformation, again revived by Zoronstres; of which an account will be hereafter given in its proper place.

² Poceckii Specimen Historia Arabica, p. 146.

In the interim, it may be proper to acquaint the reader, that at this time all the idolatry of the world was divided between two fects, a that is, the worshippers of images, who were called the Sabians, and the worshippers of fire, who were called the Magians. The true religion, which Noah taught his posterity, was that which Abraham practifed, the worshipping of one God, the fupreme Governor and Creator of all things, with hopes in his mercy through a mediator: for the necessity of a mediator between God and man was a general notion, which obtained among all mankind from the beginning; for being conscious of their own meanness, vileness, and impurity, they could not conceive, how it was possible for them, of themselves alone, to have any access to the all-holy, all-glorious, and supreme Governor of all things. They confidered him as too high, and too pure, and themselves too low and polluted, for such a converse; and therefore concluded, that there must be a mediator, by whose means only they could make any address unto him, and by whose intercession alone any of their petitions could be accepted of. But no clear revelation being then made of the Mediator whom God had appointed, because as yet he had not been manifested unto the world, they took upon them to address unto him by mediators of their own chufing. And their notion of the fun, moon, and flars, being, that they were the tabernacles or habitations of intelligences, which animated those orbs in the same manner as the foul of man animates his body, and were the causes of all their motions; and that these intelligences were of a middle nature between God and them, they thought these the fittelt beings to become the mediators between God and them. And therefore the planets being the nearest to them of all these heavenly bodies, and generally looked on to have the greatest influence on this world, they made choice of them in the first place for their gods-mediators, who were to mediate for them with the supreme God, and procure from him the mercies and favours which they prayed for; and accordingly they directed divine worship unto them as fuch. And here began all the idolatry that hath been practifed in the world. They full worshipped them per facella, that is, by their tabernacles, and afterwards by images also. By these facella, or tabernacles, they meant the orbs themselves, which they looked on only as the facella or facred tabernacles, in which the intelligences had their habitations. And therefore when they paid their devotions to any one of them, they directed their worship towards the planet in which they supposed he dwelt. But these orbs, by their rising and setting, being as much under the horizon as above, they were at a lofs how to address to them in their absence. To remedy this, they had recourse to the invention of images; in which, after their confecration, they thought these intelligences, or inferior deities, to be as much prefent by their influence, as in the planets themselves; and that all addresses to them were made as effectually before the one, as before the other. And this was the beginning of image-worship among them. To these images were given the names of the planets they represented, which were the same they are still called by. And hence it is, that we find Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Apollo, Mercury, Venus, and Diana, to be first ranked in the polytheism of the ancients; for they were their first gods. After this a notion obtaining, that good men departed had a power with God also to mediate and intercede for them, they deified many of those, whom they thought to be fuch; and hence the number of their gods increased in the idolatrous times of the world. This religion first began among the Chaldeans; which their knowledge in astronomy helped to lead them to. And from this it was, that Abraham separated himself when he came out of Chaldea. From the Chaldeans it spread itself over all the East, where the professors of it had the name of Sabians. From them it passed into Egypt, and from thence to the Grecians, who propagated it to all the Western nations of the world. And therefore those, who mislike the notion advanced by Maimonides, a that many of the Jewish laws were made in opposition to the idolatrous rites of the Sabians, are much mistaken, when they object against it, that the Sabians were an inconfiderable fect, and therefore not likely to have been to far regarded in that matter. They are now indeed, fince the growth of Christianity and Mahometism in the world, reduced to an inconfiderable fect; but anciently they were all the nations of the world that worshipped God by images. And that Maimonides understood the name in this latitude, is plain from hence, that he tells us, the Sabians, whom he fpoke of, were a fect b whose herefy had overspread almost all mankind. remainder of this fect slill subfifts in the East, under the same name of Sabians, which they pretend to have received from Sabius a fon of Seth's. And among the books wherein the doctrines of their fect are contained, they have one, which they call the book of Seth, and fay, that it was written by that patriarch. That which hath given them the greatest credit among the people of the east is, that the best of their astronomers have been of this fect, as Thebet Ebn Korrah, Albettani, and others; for the stars being the gods they worshipped, they made them the chief subject of their studies. These Sabians, in the confecrating of their images, used many incantations, to draw down into them from the stars those intelligences for whom they erected them, whose power and influence they held didasterward dwell in them. And from hence the whole soolery of Telesms, which some make so much ado about, had its original.

² Vide Pocockii Specimen Historiæ Arabicæ, p. 138. Golii Notas ad Alfraganum, p. 251. Maimonidem in Morch Nevochim. Hotingeri Historiam Orientalem, lib. 4. c. 8. Historiam religionis veterum Perfarum per Thomam Hyde.

Directly opposite to these were the Magians, another sect, who had their original in the same eastern countries; for a they abominating all images, worshipped God only by fire. They began first in Persia, and there, and in India, were the only places where this fect was propagated; and there they remain even to this day. Their chief doctrine was, that there b were two principles, one which was the cause of all good, and the other the cause of all evil, that is to say, God and the devil; that the former is represented by light, and the other by darkness, as their truest symbols; and that, of the composition of these two, all things in the world are made: the good god they name Yazdan, and also Ormuzd, and the evil god, Ahraman: the former is by the Greeks called Oramasses, and the latter Arimanius. And therefore, when Xerxes prayed for that evil upon his enemies, that it might be put into the minds of all of them to drive their best and bravest men from them, as the Athenians had Themistocles, c he addreffed his prayer to Arimanius the evil god of the Perfians, and not to Oramaides their good god. And concerning thefe two gods there was this difference of opinion among them, that whereas some held both of them to have been from all eternity, there were others that contended, that the good god only was eternal, and that the other was created. But they both agreed in this, that there will be a continual opposition between these two till the end of the world; that then the good god shall overcome the evil god, and that from thence forward each of them shall have his world to himself, that is, the good god his world with all good men with him, and the evil

b This opinion Manes, the herecic, received from them, and would have introduced it into the Chriftian religion, it being the principal point which those of his herefy, called from him Manichees, endeavoured to impose on the world.

^a Vide Pocockii specimen historiæ Arabicæ, p. 146, 147, &c et Historiam religionis veterum Perfarum per Thomam Hyde.

CPlutarchus in Themistocle.

god his world with all evil men with him; that darkness is the truest symbol of the evil god, and light the truest symbol of the good god. And therefore they always worshipped him before fire, as being the cause of light, and especially before the sun, as being in their opinion the perfectest fire, and causing the perfectest light. And for this reason, in all their temples, they had fire continually burning on altars, erected in them for that purpose. And before these facred fires they offered up all their public devotions, as likewise they did all their private devotions before their private fires in their own houses. Thus did they pay the highest honour to light, as being in their opinion the truest representative of the good god; but always hated darkness, as being, what they thought, the trueit representative of the evil god, whom they ever had in the utmost detestation, as we now have the devil: and, for an instance hereof, whenever they had an occasion in any of their writings to mention his name, they always wrote it backward, and inversed, as thus, uswery. And these were the tenets of this sect, when, on the death of Cambyfes, Smerdis and Patizithes, the two chiefest ringleaders of it, made that attempt for the usurping of the sovereignty which I have mentioned.

The 2 feven princes, who had flain these usurpers, entering into confultation among themselves about the settling An. 521. of the government, on the fixth day after, came to Darius I. this agreement: That the monarchy should be continued in the same manner as it had been established by Cyrus; and that, for the determining which of them should be the monarch, they should meet on horseback the next morning against the rifing of the fun, at a place in the suburbs of the city, which they had appointed for it, and that he whose horse should first neigh, should be the king; for the fun being then the great deity of the Perfians, and equally adored by them all, whether of the Sabian or Magian fect, by this method they feemed to refer the election to it. But the groom of Darius, one of the feven princes, being informed of what was agreed on, made use of a device which fecured the crown to his mafter; for the night before having tied a mare to the place where they were the next morning to meet, he brought Darius's horfe thither, and put him to cover the mare; and therefore, as foon as the princes came thither at the time appointed, Darius's horse, at the fight of the place, remembering the more, ran thither and neighed; whereon he was forthwith faluted king by the rest, and accordingly placed on the throne. He was the fon of Hystaspes, a noble Persian of the royal family of Achæmenes, who had followed lowed Cyrus in all his wars. He was at that time governor of the province of Perfia, and fo continued for many years after his fon's advancement to the throne. This Darius, in the writings of the latter Perfians, is called Gushtasph, and his father Lorasph; and, under these names, they are much spoken of in that country even to this day.

The empire of Perfia being thus reftored, and fettled by the wildom and valour of thele feven princes, they were afterwards admitted to extraordinary honours and privileges under the new king; for they were to have access to his presence at all times, whenever they should defire, unless only when he was accompanying with any of his wives, and their advice was to be first had in the management of all the public affairs of the empire. And whereas the king only wore his turbant directly upright, and all others till then with its top reverfed, or turned backward, thefe, had it by way of special privilege granted unto them from thenceforth, to wear their turbants with the top turned forward. For they having, when they went in to fall upon the Magians, turned the back-part of their turbants forward, that they might by that fignal be the better known to each other in the fcuiffe, in memory of this, as an especial mark of honour, they were permitted to wear their turbants in that manner ever afterward. And from this time the Perhan kings of this race had always feven chief counsellors in the same manner privileged, who were their prime affiltants in the government, and by whose advice all the public affairs of the empire were transacted; and under this character we find them both in a the book of Ezra, and in the b book of Esther, made mention of.

As foon as Darius was fettled in the throne, c to establish him the firmer in it, he took to wife Atosla the daughter of Cyrus, and also another daughter of his, called Artistona. The former had been before wife to Cambyles, her brother, and afterwards to Smerdis the Magian, while he usurped the throne. But Artistona was a virgin, when he married her, and was the most beloved by him of all his wives. Besides these, he took also to wife Parmys, the daughter of the true Smerdis, brother of Cambyles, and Phedyma the daughter of Otanes, by whose means the imposture of the Magian was discovered, and by these had a great many children, both sons and daughters.

Although, by the death of the usurper, his edict which prohibited the building of the temple was now at an end, yet, the Jews neglecting to refume the work, d God did for this reason

fmite

² Chap. vii. 14.

^{*} Chap. i. 14.

c Herodotus, lib. 3.

d Haggai i. 6-11. & ii. 17. 19.

fmite the land with barrenness, so that both the vintage and the harvest failed them. But in the 2d year of Darius, they being by the prophet Haggai informed of the cause of this judgement upon them, and exhorted to the doing of Darius 2. their duty for the averting of it, they betook themfelves again to prepare for the carrying on of the work. It was on a the first day of the 6th month (which answers to about the middle of our August) that the word of the Lord, by Haggai the prophet, came to Zerubbabel the fon of Salathiel, governor of Judea, and to Jeshuathe son of Jozadak the high priest, concerning this matter. And, b on the 24th day of the same month, they being excited hereby arose with all the remnant of the people, and obeyed the voice of the Lord, and again applied themselves with all diligence to provide stone and timber, and all other materials, that were necessary for the again carrying on of the work. And, to encourage them to go on vigorously herewith, on the 21st day of the 7th month (i.e. about the beginning of our October), canother message from God came to them by the fame prophet, which not only affured them of his prefence with them herein, to make it profper in their hands; but also promised them, that d the glory of the latter house, when built, should be greater than the glory of the former house; which was accordingly accomplished, when Christ our Lord came to this his temple, and honoured it with his presence. In all other respects this latter temple, the c same prophet tells us, at its sink building, was as nothing in comparison of the former.

In the f 8th month of the same year (which answers to part of our October and part of November), the word of the Lord came by Zechariah the prophet to the people of the Jews, exhorting them to repentance, and promising them mercy and favour on their obedience hereto.

On the $24th day of the 9th month (which fell about the beginning of our December), the Jews, after they had been employed from the 24th day of the 6th month in preparing materials for the temple, went on again with the building of it; h whereon the prophet Haggai promifed them from God a a deliverance from that barrenness of their land, with which it had been smitten, and plentiful increase of all its fruits for the future; and also i delivered unto Zerubbabel a message from God of mercy and favour unto him.

In

a Haggai i. r.

b Haggai i. 15.

⁶ Haggai ii. 1. A Haggai i. 9.

f Haggai ii. 3.

f Zech. i. r.

[#] Haggai ii. 18.

Haggai ii. 10---19.

Haggai ii. 20---23.

In the beginning of the next year (which was the 3d year of Darius according to the a Babylonian and Perfian An. 519. account, but the fecond according to the Jewish), the Darlus 3.. Samaritans understanding, that the building of the temple went on again, notwithflanding the stop which they had procured to be put to it in the last reign, they b betook themfelves again to their old malicious practices for the obstructing of the work; and therefore applied themselves to Tatnai, whom Darius had made chief governor, or prefect, of all the provinces of Syria and Palestine, (which was c one of the 20 prefectures into which he had lately divided his whole empire), and made complaint to him against the Jews as to this matter, fuggefting, that they proceeded herein without authority, and that it would tend to the prejudice of the king; whereon Tatnai, being accompanied by Setharboznai (who feems to have been then governor of Samaria), came to Jerusalem, to take an account of what was there a-doing, But Tatnai, being a man of temper and justice, after he had made a view of the building, did not proceed roughly and rashly to put a stop to it, but first inquired of the elders of the Jews by what authority they had gone on with it. And they having produced to him Cyrus's decree, he would not take upon him to contradict the same, or order any thing contrary to it upon his own authority; but first wrote letters to the king, to know his pleasure concerning it; wherein he fairly stated the case, setting forth the matter of fact, and also the Jews plea of Cyrus's decree, for the justifying of themfelves herein; and thereon requested, that fearch might be made among the records of the kingdom, whether there were any fuch decree granted by Cyrus, or no, and that thereon the king would be pleafed to fignify unto him, what he would have done herein. Whereon d fearch being made, and the decree being found among the rolls in the royal palace at Echatana in Media, where Cyrus was when he granted it, the king refolved to confirm the fame: for having lately married two of the daughters of Cyrus, the better to fortify his title to the crown thereby, he

For the Babylonians and Perfians, at this time, began their year from the beginning of January; but the Jews from Nifan, about 10 or 11 weeks after. And therefore, feeing the eighth month (which answers in part to our October) was according to Zechariah (c. i. v. 1.) in the fecond year of Darius, whatfoever was acted from the beginning of January, within a year after, must be in the 3d year of Darius, according to the Babylonish account, and also according to the exact truth of the matter; for Darius began his reign with the beginning of the Babylonish year.

⁶ Ezta v. 3.-- 17.

⁶ Herodotus, lib. 3.

d Ezra vi.

thought it concerned him to do every thing that might tend to support the honour and veneration which was due to the memory of that great prince; and therefore would suffer nothing to be infringed of that, which he had so solemnly granted, but ordered his royal decree to be drawn; wherein recitement being made of the decree of Gyrus, he commanded it in every particular to be observed, and sent it to Tatnai and Setharboznai, to see it fully and effectually put in execution, decreeing, that whose foever should alter the same, or put any obstruction to it, should have his house pulled down, and that, a gallows being made of the timber of it, he should be hanged thereon.

On a the 24th day of the 11th month (that is about the beginning of our February), the prophet Zechariah had, in a vision, that revelation made unto him which is contained in the book of his prophecies, from the 7th verse of the 1st chapter to the 9th verse of the 6th chapter. The substance of which is to express the mercy that God would shew unto his people, in the restoration and redemption of Sion, and the vengeance which he would execute upon those that had oppressed them.

About the beginning of the 4th year of Darius, his decree which confirmed that of Cyrus in favour of the Jews, An. 518. was brought to Jerufalem. It was about the beginning of the former year that Tatnai fent to the king about it, and less than a year's time cannot be well allowed for the dispatch of such an affair; for the king then residing at Shufhan in Perfia, was at fuch a distance from Judea, that the journey of the messenger thither to him, could not take up less than three months time, (for b Ezra was four months in coming to Judea from Babylon, which was at least one quarter of the way nearcr); and, on his arrival, it cannot be supposed that, in a court where the government of fo large an empire was managed, he could immediately come at a disparch. The multiplicity of other affairs there agitated must necessarily detain him some time, before it could come to his turn to be heard for the delivery of his meffage; and when he had obtained an order to fearch among the records of the empire for the decree of Cyrus (which we cannot imagine to have been without a farther time of attendance), he or fome other messenger first went to Babylon, to make the fearch there; and, on his failing of finding it in that place, he went from thence to Ecbatana, the capital of Media, where, having found the involment of it (for it feems Cyrus was there when he granted it), he returned with it from thence to Shushan. In which three journeys and two fearches, confidering the dif-

² Zechariah i. 7. D Ezra vii. 9.

This is the fame that is now called

tance of the faid three places from each other, and the vast number of records which, in the registers of so large an empire, must be turned over for the finding of that which was fearched for, less than five months could not have been expended. And when the record of Cyrus's decree was brought from Ecbatana to Shufhan, a month is the least time that can be supposed for the difpatch of the new decree which Darius made in confirmation of it: and then three months more must be allowed for the carrying of it to Tatnai, and from him to Judea. All which put together, make a full year from the time of Tatnai's writing his letter, to the time of the arrival of Darius's decree in answer to it. When Tatnai and Setharboznai, on the perufal of it, found how firictly the king required obedience to be given thereto, they durst not but act in conformity to it; a and therefore they did immediately let the Jews know hereof, and forthwith took care to have it fully and effectually put in execution. And from that time, the building of the house went on so successfully, that it was fully finished within three years after: for, by virtue of this decree, the Jews were not only fully authorifed to go on with the building, but were also furnished with the expences of it out of the taxes of the province. This had been granted by Cyrus in the former decree, but by the underband dealings of the Samaritans, and other enemies, in corrupting those, through whose hands the administration of the public affairs and public revenues passed, this part of Cyrus's decree was rendered ineffectual during a great part of his reign, and through the whole reign of Cambyles. And therefore, during all that time, the Jews being left to carry on the work at their own charges only, and they being then very poor, as being newly returned from their captivity, it went very flowly on. But, being now helped again by the king's bounty, they followed it with that diligence, that they foon brought it to a conclusion.

The publishing of this decree at Jerusalem may be reckoned the thorough refloration of the Jewish state: and from the thorough destruction of it, in the burning of the city and temple of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, to this time, is just 70 years. The time falling so exactly, and the prophet Zechariah confirming it, by expressing, under b the 4th year of Darius, that the mourning and fasting of the Jews for the destruction of Jerusalem, and the utter driving of them out of the land on the death of Gedaliah, was then c just 70 years: this hath given a plausible handle to some for the placing of the beginning of the 70 years of the Byablonish captivity, spoken of by Jeremiah, at the destruction

² Ezra vi. 13. And Josephus Antiq. lib. 11. c. 4.

b Zech. vii. r. c Zech. vii. s.

tion of Jerusalem, and the end of them, at the publication of this decree of Darius. But the scripture plainly tells us, that these 70 years, as prophefied of by the prophet a Jeremiah, began from the 4th year of Jehoiakim, and expired b on the first of Cyrus, on his then granting his decree for the rebuilding of the temple, and the return of the Jews again into their own land. But this matter will admit of a very eafy reconciliation, for both computations may very well stand together; for, though the Babylonish captivity did begin from the 4th of sehoiakim, when Nebuchadnezzar first subjugated the land, and carried away to Babylon the first captives, yet it was not completed till he had absolutely destroyed it in the 11th year of Zedekiah, which was just 18 years after. And so likewise, though the deliverance from this captivity, and the restoration of the Jewish state thereon, was begun by the decree of Cyrus in the first year of his reign; vet it was not completed till that decree was put in full vigour of execution by the decree, which Darius granted in the 4th year of his reign for the confirmation of it; which was also just 18 years after. And therefore, if we reckon from the beginning of the captivity, to the beginning of the restoration, we must reckon from the 4th year of Jehoiakim to the first of Cyrus, which was just 70 years; and, if we reckon from the completion of the captivity, to the completion of the restoration, we must reckon from the 11th of Zedekiah to the 4th of Darius; which was also just 70 years. So that, whether we reckon from the beginning of the captivity to the beginning of the refloration, or from the completing of the captivity to the completing of the restoration, Jeremiah's prophecy of the 70 years captivity will be both ways equally accomplished; and therefore, I doubt not, but that both ways were equally intended therein, though the words of the prophecy feem chiefly to refer to the former.

On the publication of this decree of Darius, and the care that was taken to have it fully put in execution, without fuffering any of those devices to obstruct it, which had rendered the former decree ineffectual, the work of the temple went on very successfully, and the state of the Jews in Judea and Jerusalem seemed so throughly restored, that the Jews who were in Babylon, on their having had an account hereof, thought it might not be any longer proper to keep those fasts, which hitherto they had observed for 70 years past, for the destruction which Judah and Jerusalem had suffered from the Chaldeans in the time of Zedekiah, as looking on them now to have obtained a thorough restoration from it; and therefore c fent messengers to Jerusalem, Sharezar, and Regem-melech, to ask advice of the priests and prophets, that were there concerning this matter. from the time of the destruction of the city and temple of Jerufalem, the Jews of the captivity had kept four fasts in commemoration of the calamities which then happened to their nation; the a first on the 10th day of the 10th month, because then Nebuchadnezzar first laid fiege to Jerusalem, in the 9th year of Zedekiah; the b fecond on the 9th day of the 4th month, because on that day the city was taken; the third c on the 10th day of the 5th month, because then the city and temple were burnt by Nebuzaradan; and the fourth d on the 3d day of the 7th month, because on that day Gedaliah was slain, and the remainder of the people were thereon dispersed and driven out of the land, which completed the defolation of it. Concerning all which fasts, and the question of the Babylonish Jews proposed concerning them, God gave them by the prophet Zechariah that answer which we have in the 7th and 8th chapters of his prophecies. Therein e the fasts of the 5th and 7th months are faid to have been observed for 70 years past. And, from the 19th year of Nebuchadnezzar according to the Jewish account, (which was the 17th according to the Babylonish account), f when Jerusalem was destroyed, to the 4th year of Darius Hystaspes, when the Jewillestate was again throughly restored, were just 70 years, according to the canon of Ptolemy; fo the facred and profane chronology do both exactly agree in this matter. The Jews still observe these four falls even to this day, though not exactly on the same days in their s present kalander, as in the former.

^{*} Jer. xxv. b 2 Chron. xxxvi. 20-23. CZech, vii.

In the beginning of the 5th year of Darius, happened h the revolt of the Babylonians, which cost him the trouble of a tedious siege again to reduce them, for it lasted 20 months. This city having, for many years during the Babylonish empire, been the mistress of the East, and domineered over all the countries round about them, could not bear the subjection which they were fallen under to the Persians, Vol. I.

h Herodotus, lib. 3. Justin, lib. r. c. 10. Polyanus, lib. 7.

a 2 Kings xxv. 1. Jeremiah lii. 4. Zechariah viii. 19.

b 2 Kings xxv. 3. Jeremiah xxix. 2. Zechariah viii. 19.

c Jeremiah lii. 12. Zechariah vii. 3. 5. & viii. 19. d Jeremiah xli. 1. Zechariah vii. 5. & viii. 19.

e Zechariah vii. 1.

f 2 Kings xxv. 8. Jeremiah lii. 12.

s Their prefent kalendar was made by R. Hillel, about the year of our Lord 360. Their former year was a lunar year, reconciled to a folar by intercalations, but in what form is uncertain, only it was always to have its beginning about the time of the vernal equinox, to which feafon, the pr. ducts of their flocks and their fields, which were required to be used at their feafs of the passover, and the Pentecost, necessarily fixed it.

especially after they had removed the imperial seat of the empire from Babylon to Shuthan; for that much diminished the grandeur, pride, and wealth of the place, which they thought they could no other way again retrieve, but by fetting themfelves up against the Persians, under a king of their own, in the fame manner as they had formerly done, under Nabopollasar, against the Assyrians. And therefore, taking the advantage of the revolution which happened in the Persian empire, first on the death of Cambyfes, and after on the flaying of the Magians, they began to lay in all manner of provisions for the war; and, after they had covertly done this for four years together, till they had fully flored the city for many years to come, in the 5th year they broke out into an open revolt, which drew Darius upon them, with all his forces, to befiege the city. In the beginning of the 3d year of Darius, we learn from the prophet Zechariah, that a the whole empire was then in peace; and therefore the revolt could not then have happened: and the message of Sharezer and Regem-melech from Babylon, b in the 4th year of his reign, proves the same for that year also; and therefore it could not be till the 5th year that this war broke out. As foon as c the Babylonians faw then selves begirt by fuch an army, as they could not cope with in the field, they turned their thoughts wholly to the supporting of themselves in the fiege: in order whereto, they took a refolution the most desperate and barbarous that ever any nation practised. For, to make their provisions last the longer, they agreed to cut off all unnecessary mouths among them; and therefore, drawing together all the women and children, they strangled them all, whether wives, fifters, daughters, or young children useless for the wars, excepting only, that every man was allowed to fave one of his wives which he best loved, and a maid servant to do the work of the boufe. And hereby was very figually fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah against them, in which he foretold, "d Thaz two things should come to them in a moment, in one day, the lofs of children and widowhood; and that thefe should come upon them in their perfection, for the multitude of their forceries, and the great abundance of their inchantments." And in what greater perfection could thele calamities come upon them, than when they themselves, thus upon themselves, became the executioners of then.? And in many other particulars did God then execute his vengeance upon this wicked and abominable city, which was foretold by feveral of the prophets; and the Jews were as often e warned to come out of the place, a Zechariah i. 11.-15.

b Zechariah vii. 1 .--- 3.

e Herodotus, lib. 3.

d Ifriah xlvii. 9.

e Isaiah xlviii. 20. Jeremiah l. 3, and

li. 6. 9. 45.

and

before the time of its approach, that they might not be involved in it. And especially a the prophet Zechariah, about two years before, fent them a call from God, that is, "to Zion, that dwelt with the daughter of Babylon, to flee and come forth from that land," that they might be delivered from the plague which God was going to inflict upon it. And when Sharezer and Regem-melech returned to Babylon, no doubt, they carried back with them, from this prophet, a repetition of the fame call: and although it be no where faid, that they paid obedience to it, and so saved themselves, yet we may take it for certain, that they did, and, by feafonably removing from Babylon before the fiege began, avoided partaking of the calamities of it: for almost all the prophecies concerning this heavy judgement upon Babylon speaking of it as the vengeance of God upon them for their cruel dealings with his people, when they were delivered into their hands, and they all at the fame time promifing peace, mercy, and favour, to all that were of his people, and particularly fuch a promise having been fent them but the year before by Sharezer and Regem-melech, it is utterly inconfistent with the whole tenor of these facred predictions, that any of the Jewish nation should be sufferers with the Babylonians in this war; and therefore we may affuredly inferthat they were all gone out of this place before this war begun. Darius having lain before Babylon a year and eight months, at length, toward the end of the 6th year of his reign, An. 5:6. he took it by the stratagem of Zopyrus, one of his chief commanders: for he, having cut off his note and ears, and mangled his body all over with flripes, fled in this condition to the belieged; where, feigning to have fuffered all this by the cruel usage of Darius, he grew thereby fo far into their confidence, as at length to be made the chief commander of their forces; which trust he made use of to deliver the city to his mafter, which could fcarce have been any other way taken: for the walls, by reason of their height and strength, made the place impregnable against all storms, batteries, and affaults; and it being furnished with provisions for a great many years, and having also d large quantities of void ground within the city, from the cultivation of which it might annually be supplied with much more, it could never have been starved into a furrender; and therefore at length it must have wearied N 2 a Zechariah ii. 6 .-- 9 .

b Zecharich viii.

CH rodotus, lib. 3. Justin. lib. i. c. 10. Polyænus, lib. 7.

Quintus Curtius, lib. 5. c. 1. Per 90 stadia habitatur, cætera serunt coluntque, ut si externa vis ingruat, obsessis alimenta ex ipsius urbis solo Submin: Arenturand worn out Darius, and all his army, had it not been thus delivered into his hands by this stratagem of Zopyrus, for which he deservedly rewarded him with the highest honours he could heap on him all his life after. As toon as Darius was mafter of the place, he took away a all their roo gates, and beat down b their walls from 200 cubits (which was their former height) to 50 cubits; and of thefe walls only c Strabo, and other after-writers are to be understood, when they describe the walls of Babylon to be no more than 50 cubits high. And as to the inhabitants, after having given them for a spoil to his Persians, who had been before their servants, according to the prophecy of Zechariah, chap. ii. g. and impaled 3000 of the most guilty and active of them in the revolt, he pardoned all the rest. But, by reason of the destruction they had made of their women in the beginning of the fiege, he was forced to fend for 50,000 of that fex out of the other provinces of the empire, to supply them with wives, without which the place must foon have become depopulated for want of propagation.

And here it is to be observed, that the punishment of Babylon kept pace with the refloration of Judah and Jerufalem, according to the prophecy of the prophet Jeremiah, chap. xxv. 12. 13. whereby he foretold, that " when the feventy years of Judah's captivity should be accomplished, God would punish the king of Babylon, and that nation for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and would make it a perpetual defolation, and would bring upon that land all the words which he had pronounced against it." For accordingly, when the refloration of Judah began, in the first of Cyrus, after the expiration of the first 70 years, that is, from the fourth of Jehoiakim to the first of Cyrus, then began Babylon's punishment, in being conquered and subjected to the Persians, in the same manner as they had conquered and fubjected the Jews to them in the beginning of the faid 70 years. And, after the expiration of the fecond 70 years, that is, from the 19th of Nebuchadnezzar, when Judah and Jerufalem were throughly delolated, to the fourth of Darius, when the restoration of both was completed, then the defolation of Babylon was also in a great measure completed in the devastation which was then brought upon it by Darius. In the first part of their purushment, their king was fluin, and their city taken; and thenceforth, from being 4 the ludy of lingdoms, and miltrefs of all the East, it became subject to the Persons. And whereas before it had been the metropolis of a great empire, this honour was [#] Jer. l. 15. & li. 44. 52. Herodot, ibid.

² Jer. li. 58. Herodot. ibid.

Strabo, lib. 16.

d IC Elvii. t.

now taken from it, and the imperial feat removed from thence to Shushan or Susa (for this seems to have been done in the first year of Cyrus's reign over the whole empire), and Babylon thenceforth, instead of having a king, had only a deputy refiding there, who governed it as a province of the Perlian empire. And at the same time that the city was thus brought under, the country was defolated and deftroyed by the inundation that was caused, by turning of the river on the taking of the city, which hath been already spoken of, and thereon it became a possession for the bittern, and pools of water, as the prophet Isaiah foretold, chap. xiv. 23. "And the fea came up upon Babylon, and the was covered with the multitude of the waves thereof," according as Jeremiah prophelied hereof, chap. li. 42. And, in the fecond part of their punishment, on Darius's taking the place, all that calamity and devastation was brought upon it, which hath been already fpoken of; and from that it did never any more recover itself, but languished a while, and at length ended, according to the words of Jeremiah, in a perpetual defolation.

In the 6th year of Darius according to the Jewish account, and on the 3d day of the 12th month, called the month of Adar (which answered to part of the third, and part of the fourth month of the Babylonish year, and confequently was in the 7th year of Darius, according to the Babylonish account), a the building of the temple at Jerusalem was finished, and the dedication of it was celebrated by the priests and Levites, and all the rest of the congregation of Israel, with great joy and folemnity. And, among other facrifices then offered, there was a fin-offering for all Ifrael of twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Ifrael; which is a farther addition of proof to what hath been above faid, that, on the return of Judah and Benjamin from the Babylonith captivity, some also of each of the other tribes of Israel returned with them out of Affyria, Babylon, and Media, whither they had been before carried, and, joining with them in the rebuilding of the temple (to which they had originally an equal right), partaked also in the folen nity of this dedication; otherwise there is no reason. why any fuch offering should have been then made in their behalf. But the most of them that returned being of the tribe of Judali, that fu allowed up the names of all the rest; for from this time the whole people of Ifrael, of what tribe foever they were, b began to be called Jews; and by that name they have all of them been ever fince known all the world over.

This work was 20 years in finithing: for fo many years were elapfed elapsed, from the 2d of Cyrus, when it was first begun, to the 7th of Darius, when it was fully finished. During the latter part of the reign of Cyrus, and through the whole reign of Cambyles, it met with fuch discouragements, through the fraudulent devices of the Samaritans, that it went but flowly on for all that time: and, during the usurpation of the Magians, and for almost a two years after, it was wholly suppressed, that is, till towards the latter end of the 2d year of the reign of D rius. But then it being again refumed, on the preaching of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, and afterwards encouraged and helped forward by the decree of Darius, it was thenceforth carried on with that vigour, especially through the exhortations and prophecies of the two prophets I have mentioned, that, in the beginning of the 7th year of Darius, it was fully finished, and dedicated anew to the service of God, in the manner as hath been faid. In this dedication, the 146th, the 147th, and the 148th pfalms feem to have been fung: for, in the Septuagint versions, they are styled the Pfalms of Haggai and Zechariah, as if they had been composed by them for this occasion; and this, no doubt, was from some ancient tradition: but, in the original Hebrew, these plalms have no such title prefixed to them, neither have they any other to contradict it.

² Fzra vi. 15—18.

P Joseph. Antiq. lib. 14. c. 5. Euseb. Demonst. Evang. lib. 8.

The decree whereby this temple was finished having been granted by Darius at his palace in Stuffan (or Sufa, as the Greeks call the place), in remembrance hereof b, the eastern gate, in the outer wall of the temple, was from this time called the gate of Shufhan, and a picture and draught of that city was pourtrayed in coulpture over it, and there continued till the last destruction of that temple by the Romans.

In the next month after the dedication, which was the month Nisan, the first of the Jewish year, the temple being now made sit for all parts of the divine service, the passover was observed in it on the 14th day of that month, according to the law of God, and solemnised by all the children of Israel that were then returned from the captivity, with great joy and gladness of heart, because, saith the book of Ezra, "d The Lord hath made them joyful, and turned the heart of the king of Asyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God or Israel: from whence Archbishop Usher infers, that Babylon must necessarily have been reduced by Darius before a In the first of Fairas, v. 73. it is faid, that the time of the stop which was put to the building was two years.

b See Lightfoot of the Temple, e. g.

c Faravi. 9-22.

^{*} Annales Veteris Tellamenti, fub A. M. 3480.

this time; for otherwife, he thinks, he could not have been here flyled king of Aflyria, Babylon being then the metropolis of that kingdom.

And if we will add one stage more to the two above mentioned, of the captivity and reftoration of Judah, and place the full completion of the captivity in the 23d of Nebuchadnezzar ac ording to the Jewish account (which was the 21st according to the Babylonish), a when Nebuzaradan carried away the last remainder of the land; and the full completion of the restoration at the finishing of the temple, and the restoration of the divine worship therein; this stage will have the like distance of 70 years for the dedication of this temple, and the folemnifing of the first passover in it, being in the 7th year of Darius, it will fall in the 70th year from the b faid 23d of Nebuchadnezzar, according to Ptolemy's canon. So that taking it which way you will, and at what stage you please, the prophecy of Jeremiah will be fully and exactly accomplished concerning this matter. And, here ending the rebuilding of the fecond temple, I shall herewith end this book.

² Teremiah lii. 30.

N 4

b That is, reckoning the 23d year of Nebuchadnezzar, according to the Jewish account, to be the 21st according to the Babylonish account, which Ptolemy went by.

OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT CONNECTED,

IN

THE HISTORY

OF

THE JEWS AND NEIGHBOURING NATIONS,

FROM

The Declension of the Kingdoms of Israel and Judah, to the Time of Christ.

BOOK IV.

An. 514.
Darius 8.

An. 614.
Darius 8.

An. 614.
Darius 8.

Darius 8.

Trouble on this occasion. The tribute of Samaria had been assigned first a by Cyrus, and afterwards by Darius, for the reparation of the temple at Jerusalem, and the furnishing of the Jews with sacrinces, that coblations and prayers might there daily be offered up for the king, and the royal family, and for the welfare and prosperity of the Persian empire. This was a matter of great regret and heart-burning to the Samaritans, and was in truth the source and the true original reason of all the oppositions which they made against them: for they thought it an indignity upon them to be forced to pay their tribute to the Jews; and therefore they did, a by bribes and other underhand dealings, prevail with the ministers, and other officers, to whose charge this matter belonged, during the latter part of the reign of Cyrus, and all the time of Cambyfes, to put a stop to this affignment, and did all elfe that they could wholly to quash it. But the grant being again b renewed by Darius, and the execution of it so strictly enjoined in the manner as hath been before related, the tribute was thenceforth annually paid, to the end for which it was affigned, without any more gainfaying, till this year. But now, on pretence that the temple was finished (though the out-buildings ftill remained unrepaired, and were not finished till many years after), they c refused to let the Jews any longer have the tribute; alledging, that it being affigned them for the repairing of their temple, now the temple was repaired, the end of that affigument was ceafed, and that confequently the payment of the faid tribute was to ceafe with it, and for this reason would pay it no longer to them. Whereon the Jews, to right themselves in this matter, fent Zerubbabel the governor, with Mordecai and Ananias, two other principal menamong them, with a complaint to Darius of the wrong that was done them, in the detaining of his royal bounty from them, contrary to the purport of the edict which he had in that behalf made. The king, on the hearing of the complaint, and the informing of himself about it, iffued out his royal order to his officers at Samaria, strictly requiring and commanding them to take effectual care, that the Samaritans observe his edict, in paying their tribute to the temple of Jerufalem, as formerly, and no more, on any pretence whatfoever, give the Jews any cause for the future to complain of their failure herein. And after this we hear no more of any oppofition or contest concerning this matter, till the time of Sanballat; which was many years after.

² Joseph. Antiq. lib. 11. c. 1. b Joseph. lib. 11. c. 4.

Ezra vi. 8-10.

From the time of the reduction of Babylon, ^d Darius had fet himself to make great preparations for a war against the Scythians, that inhabited those countries which lie between the Danube and the Tanais: his pretence for it was to be revenged on them for their having invaded Asia, and held it in subjection to them 28 years, as both been after related. This was in the time of Cyaxares, the first of that name, king of Media, about 120 years before. But for want of a better colour for that which his ambition and thirst for conquest only led him to, this was given out for the reason of the war. In order whereto, having a Ezra iv. 5 . Joseph. Antiq. lib. 11. c. 2.

b Ezra vi.

c Joseph. Antiq. lib. 11. c. 4.

d Lerodotus, lib. 4. Justin, lib. 2. c. 5. Cornelius Nepos in Miltiade.

drawn together an army of 700,000 men, he marched An. 513. with them to the Thracian Bosphorus, and having Darius 9. there passed over it on a bridge of boats, he brought all Thrace in subjection to him; and then marched to the Itter or Danube, where he appointed his fleet to come to him (which confitted mostly of Ionians, and other Grecian nations, dwelling in the maritime parts of Asia, and on the Hellespont); he there passed over another bridge of boats into the country of the Scythians, and having there, for three months time, pursued them through feveral defert and uncultivated countries, where they drew him by their flight of purpose to harass and destroy his army, he was glad at last to return with one half of them, having lost the other half in this unfortunate and ill-projected expedition. And, had not the lonians, by the perfuafion of Hestiæus, prince of Miletus (or tyrant as the Grecians call him), contrary to the opinion of others among them, staid with the fleet to afford him a passage back, he and all the rest must have perished also. Miltiades, prince of the Thracian Cherfonefus, which lies at the mouth of the Hellespont, being one of those who attended Darius with his ships, was earnest for their departure, and the first that moved it, telling them, that, by their going away and leaving Darius and his army to perish on the other side of the Danube, they had a fair opportunity of breaking the power of the Perfians, and delivering themselves from the yoke of that tyranny which would be to the advantage of every one of their respective countries. This was urged by him in a council of the chief commanders; and would certainly have taken place, but that Hestiæus, in answer hereto, soon made them sensible, what a dangerous risk they were going to run: for he convinced them, that if this were done, the people of each of their cities, being freed from the fear of the Persians, would immediately rife upon them to recover their liberties; and this would end in the ruin of every one of them, who now, with fovereign authority, under the protection of Darius, securely reigned over them. Which being the true state of their case, this argument prevailed with them: fo that they all refolved to flay: and this gave Darius the means of again repassing the river into Thrace, where having left Megabyzus, one of his chief commanders, with part of his army, to finish his conquests in those parts, and throughly fettle the country in his obedience, he repaffed the Bosphorus with the rest, and retired to Sardis, where he flaid all the winter, and the most part of the ensuing year, to refresh his broken forces, and resettle his affairs in those parts of his empire, after the shock that had been given them, by the baffle and loss which he had sustained in this ill-advised expedition.

Megabyzus, having reduced most of the nations of Thrace under the Persian yoke, returned to Sardis to Darius, and a from thence accompanied him to Susa, whither Darius 10. he marched back about the end of the year, after having appointed Artaphernes, one of his brothers, governor of Sardis, and Otanes chief commander of Thrace, and the maritime parts adjoining, in the place of Megabyzus. This Otanes was the son of Sisamnes, one of the royal judges of Persia, who having been convicted of bribery and corruption by Cambyses, there is related this remarkable instance of that king's justice towards him, b that he caused him to be slea'd alive, and making with his skin a covering for the seat of the tribunal, made this his son, whom he appointed to succeed him in his office, to sit thereon, that being thus put in mind of his father's punishment, he might thereby be admonished to avoid his crime.

The Scythians, to be revenged on Darius for his invading their country, c passed over the Danube, and ravaged all those parts of Thrace, that had submitted to the Persians, as far as the Hellespont; whereon Miltiades, to avoid their rage, fled from the Chersonesus; but, on the retreat of the enemy, he returned, and was again reinstated in his former power by the inhabitants of the country.

About this time Darius, being desirous to enlarge his dominions eastward, in order to the conquering of those countries, laid a delign of first making a discovery An. 509. of them; d for which purpose having built a fleet of ships at Caspatyrus, a city on the river Indus, and as far up upon it as the borders of Scythia, he gave the command of it to Scylax a Grecian of Caryandia, a city in Caria, and one well skilled in maritime affairs; and fent him down the river, to make the best discoveries he could of all the parts which lay on the banks of it on either fide; ordering him, for this end, to fail down the current, till he should arrive at the mouth of the river, and that then, passing through it into the Southern ocean, he should shape his course westward, and that way return home. Which orders he having exactly executed, he returned by the firaits of Babelmandel and the Red fea, and, on the 30th month after his first fetting out from Caspatyrus, landed in Egypt, at the fame place from whence Necho, king of Egypt, formerly fent out his Phænicians to fail round the coasts of Africa, which which it is most likely was the port where now the town of Suez stands, at the hither end of the said Red sea. And from thence he went to Susa, and there gave Darius an account of all the discoveries which he had made. After this Darius entered India with an army, and brought all that large country under him, and a made it the 20th presecture of his empire; from whence he annually received a tribute of 360 talents of gold, according to the number of the days of the then Persian year, appointing a talent to be paid him for every day in it. This payment was made him according to the standard of the Euboic talent, which was near the same with the Attic; and therefore, according to the lowest computation, it b amounted to the value of 1,095,000 pounds of our money.

^a Herodotus, lib. 5. ^b Herodotus, lib. 5. Valerius Maximus, lib. 6., c. 3. Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 24.

E Herodotus, lib. 6. d Herodotus, lib. 4.

A c fedition happening in Naxus, the chief island of the Cyclades in the Egean fea, now called the Archipelago, An. 504. and the better fort being therein overpowered by the greater number, many of the wealthiest of the inhabitants were expelled the island, and driven into banishment; whereon retiring to Miletus, they there begged the affiftance of Ariftagoras, for the restoring of them again to their country. This Ariftagoras then governed that city as deputy to Hestiæus, whose nephew and fon-in-law he was; Hestiæus being then absent at Susa in Persia: for Darius, on his return to Sardis, after his unfortunate expedition against the Scythians, being throughly informed, that he owed the fafety of himself and all his army to Hestiæus, in that he perfuaded the Ionians not to desert him at the Danube, fent for him to come to him, and, having acknowledged his fervice, bid him ask his reward. Whereon he defired of him the Edonian Myrcinus, a territory on the river Strymon in Thrace, in order to build a city there; and, having obtained his request, immediately on his return to Miletus, he equipped a fleet, and failed for Thrace, and, having there taken possession of the territory granted him, did forthwith set himself on the enterprise of building his intended city in the place projected. Megabyzus, being then governor of Thrace for Darius, foon faw what danger this might create to the king's affairs in these parts: for he considered that the new-built city flood upon a navigable river; that the country thereabout afforded aburdance of timber for the building of thips; that it was inhabited by feveral nations both of Greeks and Barbarians, which could furnish a great multitude of men fit for military fervice both by fea and land; that, if these should get such a crasty and enterprifing

² Herodotus, lib. 3.

b For, according to the lowest valuation, an Attic talent of goid amounts to 3000 pounds of our money.

E Herodetus, lib. 5.

enterprifing a person as Hestiaus at the head of them, they might foon grow to a power both by fea and land, too hard for the king to master; and that especially since, from their filver and gold mines, of which there were many in that country, they might be furnished with means enough to carry on any enterprise they should undertake. All this, on his return to Sardis, he reprefented unto the king, who being thereby made fully fenfible of the error he had committed, for the remedying of it fent a messenger to Myrcinus to call Hestiæus to Sardis to him, under pretence, that having great matters in defign, he wanted his counfel and advice concerning them, by which means having gotten him into his power, he carried him with him to Sufa, pretending, that he needed fuch an able counfellor and fo faithful a friend to be always about him, to advife with on all occasions that might happen; and that he would make him so far a partaker of his fortunes by his royal bounty to him in Persia, that he should have no reason any more to think either of Myrcinus or Miletus. Hestiæus, hereon seeing himself under a necessity of obeying, accompanied Davius to Sufa, and appointed Aristageras to govern at Miletus in his absence, and to him the banished Naxians applied for relief. As foon as Ariflagoras understood from them their case, he entertained a design of improving this opportunity to the making of himfelf mafter of Naxus, and therefore readily promifed them all the relief and affiliance which they defired: but not being strong enough of himself to accomplish what he intended, he went to Sardis, and communicated the matter to Artaphernes, telling him, that this was an opportunity offered for the putting of a rich and fertile island into the king's hands; that, if he had that, all the rest of the Cyclades would of course fall under his power also; and that then Eubœa, an island as big as Cyprus, lying next, would be an eafy conquest; from whence he would have an open passage into Greece, for the bringing of all that country under his obedience; and that 100 ships would be sufficient to accomplish this enterprife. Artaphernes, on the hearing of the proposal, was so much pleased with it, that, instead of 100 ships, which Arislagoras demanded, he promifed him 200, provided the king liked hereof: and accordingly, on his writing to him, having received his answer of approbation, he sent him the Datus 19. next fpring, to Wiletus, the number of thips which he had promifed, under the command of Megabates, a noble Perfian of the Archæmenian or royal family. But his commission being to obey the orders of Aristagoras, and the haughty Persian not brooking to be under the command of an Ionian, this creaand a diffention between the two generals, which was carried on fo far, that Megabates, to be revenged on Ariftagoras, betrayed the defign to the Naxians: whereon they provided fo fully for their defence, that, after the Persians had, in the siege of the chief city of the illand, fpent four months, and all their provifions, they were forced to retire, for want wherewith there any longer to fubfift, and so the whole plot miscarried; the blame whereof being, by Megabates, all laid upon Aristagoras, and the false acculations of the one being more favourably heard than the just defence of the other, Artaphernes charged on him all the expences of the expedition: and it was given him to underfland, that they would be exacted of him to the utmost penny, which being more than he was able to pay, he forefaw that this must end not only in the loss of his government, but also in his utter ruin; and therefore, being driven into extremities by the desperateness of his case, he entertained thoughts of rebelling against the king, as the only way left him for the extricating of himself out of this difficulty; and while he had this under confideration, came a message to him from Hestiæus, which advised the same thing; for Hestiæus after several years continuance at the Persian court, being weary of their manners, and exceeding defirous of being again in his own country, fent this advice unto Aristagoras, as the likeliest means to accomplish his aim herein; for he concluded, that if there were any combuftions raifed in Ionia, he should easily prevail with Darius to send him thither to appeale them, as it accordingly came to pals. Aristagoras therefore finding his own inclinations backed with the order of Hestiæus, communicated the matter to the chief of the Ionians, and finding them all ready to join with him in what he proposed, he fixed his resolutions for a revolt, and immediately fet himfelf to make all manner of preparations to put them in execution.

The Tyrians, after the taking of their city by Nebuchadnezzar, having been reduced to a flate of fervitude, continued under the prefiure of it full 70 years: but these being now expired, they were again, according to the a prophecy of Isaiah, restored to their former privileges, and were allowed to have a king again of their own; and accordingly had so till the time of Alexander. This favour seems to have been granted them by Darius in confideration of their utefulness to him in his naval wars, and especially at this time, when he needed them and their shipping so much for the reducing of the lonians again to their obedience to him. Hereon they soon recovered their former prosperity and, by the means of their traffic, whereby they had made their city the chief mart of all the Luft, they soon grew to that greatness, both of power and riches, as enabled them, on Alexander's invading the East, to make a greater stand against him, than all the Persian empire besides; for they stopped the progress of his whole army sull seven months, before they could be reduced, as will be hereafter shewn. This grant was made them by Darius in the 19th year of his reign.

The next year after, Aristogoras, to engage the Ionians the more firmly to stick to him, a restored to them all their liberties: for, beginning first with himself at Miletus, he there abolished his own authority, and reinstated the people in the government; and then, going round Ionia, forced all the other tyrants (as the Greeks then called them) in every city to do the fame; by which, having united them into one common league, and gotten himself to be made the head of it, he openly declared his revolt from the king, and armed both by sea and land to make war against him. This was done in the 20th year of the reign of Darius.

Aristagoras, to strengthen himself the more against the Persians in this war, which he had begun against them, b went in the beginning of the following year to Lacedæmon, Darius 21, to engage that city in his interest, and gain their assistance. But being there rejected, he came to Athens, where he had a much more favourable reception: for he had the good fortune to come thither at a time when he found the Athenians in a thorough disposition to close with any proposal against the Persians that should be offered to them, they being then in the highest degree exasperated against them on this occasion. Hippias the fon of Pifittratus, tyrant of Athens, having been expelled thence about 10 years before, after he had in vain tried several other ways for his restoration, at length applied himself to Artaphernes at Sardis; and, having there infinuated himself a great way into his favour, was well heard in all that he had to fay against the Athenians, and he spared not to do all that he could to fet Artaphernes against them; which the Athenians having advice of, fent an embaffy to Sardis, to make friend. ship with Artaphernes, and to defire him not to give ear to their exiles against them. The answer which Artaphernes gave them was, that they must receive Hippias again, if they would be safe. Which haughty meffage being brought back to Athens, did fet the whole city into a rage against the Persians; and in this juncture Aristagoras coming thither, easily obtained from them all that he defired; and accordingly they ordered a fleet of 20 ships for his affiftance.

In the third year of the war, c the Ionians having gotten

^a Herodot, lib. 5. b Ibid. c Herodot, lib. 5.

all their forces together, and being affifted with 20 Anno 500. ships from Athens, and five from Eretria, a city in the island of Eubea, they failed to Ephesus; and, having there laid up their ships, resolved on an attempt upon Sardis; and accordingly marched thither, and took the place. But Sardis being built most of care, and their houses being therefore very combustible, one of them being accidentally fet on fire, did spread the slame to all the rest, and the whole city was burnt down, excepting only the castle; where Artaphernes retired, and defended himself. But, after this accident, the Perfians and Lydians gathering together for their defence, and other forces coming in to their affiftance from the adjacent parts, the Ionians faw it was time for them to retreat; and therefore marched back to their ships at Ephesus, with all the speed they were able; but, before they could reach the place, they were overtaken, fought with, and overthrown with a great flaughter. Whereon the Athenians going on board their ships, hoisted their fails, and returned home, and would not after this be any farther concerned in this war, notwithstanding all the most earnest intreaties with which they were folicited to it by Aristagoras. However a their having engaged thus far, gave rife to that war between the Perlians and the Greeks; which, being carried on for feveral generations after between these two nations, caused infinite calamities to both, and at last ended in the utter destruction of the Persian empire; for Darius, on his hearing of the burning of Sardis, and the part which the Athenians had therein, from that time refolved on a war against Greece; and that he might be fure not to forget it, he caused one of his attendants every day, when he was let at dinner, to fay aloud unto him three times, Sir, remember the Athenians. In the burning of Sardis, it happened, that the temple of Cybele, the goddess of the country, took fire, and was confumed with the rest of the city; which afterwards served the Persians for a pretence to fet on fire all the temples of the Grecians which came in their way, though in truth that proceeded from another cause, which shall be hereafter related.

On the departure of the Athenians, be the rest of the consederate sleet failed to the Hellespont and the Propontis, and reduced the Byzantines, and most of the other Grecian cities in those parts under their power: and then, sailing back again, brought in the Carians to join with them in this war, and also the Cypriots, who all (excepting the Amathusians) entered into the same consederacy against Darius, and revolted from him; which drawing upon them all the forces that the Persians had in

^a Herodot, ibid. Cornelius Nepos in Miltiade, b Herodot, lib. 5.

Cilicia, and the other neighbouring provinces, and also a great fleet from Phænicia, the Ionians sailed thither to their assistance; and engaging the Phænician sleet, gave them a great overthrow. But, at the same time, the Cypriots being vanquished in a battle at land, and the head of that conspiracy slain in it, the Ionians lost the whole fruit of their victory at sea, and were forced to return, without having at all benefited either themselves or their allies by it: for, after this defeat at land, the whole island was again reduced; and, within three years after, the same persons whom they had now assisted came against them with their ships, in conjunction with the rest of the Persian sleet, to complete their utter destruction.

The next year after, being the 23d of Darius, 2 Daurises, Hymees, and Otanes, three Persian generals, and Anno 499. all fons in law of Darius by the marriage of his Darius 23. daughters, having divided the Persian forces between them, marched three feveral ways to attack the revolters. Daurifes with his army directed his course to the Hellespont; but, after having there reduced feveral of the revolted cities, on his hearing that the Carians had also joined the confederates, he left those parts, and marched with all his forces against them. Whereon Hymees, who was first sent to the Propontis, after having taken the city of Cyus in Mysia, marched thence to fupply his place on the Hellespont, where there was much more need of him, and there reduced all the Ilian coaft; but falling fick at Troas, he there died the next year after. Artaphernes and Otanes, with the third army, refolving to strike at the very heart of the confederacy, fell into Ionia and Æolia, where the chief of their strength lay, and took Clazomenæ in Ionia, and Cyma in Æolia; which was fuch a blow to the whole confederacy, that Aristagoras hereon, despairing of his cause, resolved to leave Miletus, and shift elsewhere for his safety; and therefore, getting together all that were willing to accompany him, he went on shipboard, and set sail for the river Strymon in Thrace, and there seized on the territory of Myrcinus, which Darius had formerly given to Hestiæus; but the next year after, while he belieged the city, he was there flain by the Thracians, and all his army cut in pieces.

In the 24th year of Darius, b Daurises having fallen into the country of the Carians, overthrew them in two battles with a very great slaughter; but, in a third battle, being drawn into an ambush, he was slain, with several other eminent Persians, and his whole army cut off and destroyed.

Vol. I.

U

Artaphernes,

a Herodotus, lib. 5.

Artaphernes, with Otanes, and the rest of the Persian generals, feeing that Miletus was the head and chief Anno 497. fireigth of the Ionian confederacy, a refolved to bend Darius 25. all their force against it, reckoning, that, if they could make themselves masters of this city, all the rest would fall of courfe. The Ioniaus, being informed of this, agreed, in their general council, to bring no army into the field, but provide and strengthen Miletus as well as they could for a fiege, and to draw all their forces to fight the Perfians by fea; in which fort of fighting they thought themselves, by reason of their skill in maritime affairs, most likely to prevail: in order whereto, they appointed Lada, a small island before Miletus, for their rendezvous; and thither they came, to the number of 353 thips: at the fight of which, the Perfians, though their fleet was double the number, fearing the event, came not to a battle with them, till they had, by their emissaries fent among them, corrupted the major part to defert the cause; so that, when they came to engage, the Samians, Lesbians, and several others, hoisting their fails, and departing home, there were not above 100 ships left to bear the whole brunt of the day; who being foon overborne by the number of the enemy, were almost all lost and defroyed. After this Miletus, being besieged both by fea and land, foon fell a prey into the hands of the victors, who abfolutely destroyed the place; which happened in the 6th year after the revolt of Arifiagoras. From Miletus the Persians marched into Caria, and having there taken some cities by force, and received others by voluntary fubmission, in a short time reduced all that country again under their former voke. The Milesians who were faved from the sword in the taking of the city, being fent captives to Darius to Sufa, he did them no farther harm, but fent them to inhabit the city of Ampha, which was fituated at the mouth of the Tigris, where, in conjunction with the Euphrates, it falls into the Persian gulf, not far from the place where now the city Balfora stands; and there they continued a Grecian colony for many ages after.

After the taking of Miletus, the Persian sleet, which mostly consisted of Phænicians, Cypriots, and Egyptians, having wintered on the coasts thereabout, bethe next year took in Sames, Chius, Lesbus, and the rest of the islands; and, while they were thus employed at sea, the armies at land fell on the cities of the continent; and, having brought them all again under their power, they treated them as they had afore threatened, that is, they made all the beautifullest of their youths canaches, sent all their virgins into Persia,

^a Harolotus, lib. 6.

h Harodotus, lib. 6.

and burnt all their cities, with their temples; into fo grievous a calamity were they brought by this revolt, which the felfdefigns of one enterprifing bufy-headed man, Hestiæus, the Mileftan, led them into; and he himfelf had his share in it; for this very year, being taken prisoner by the Persians, he was carried to Sardis, and there crucified, by the order of Arta-He hastened his execution, without confulting Darius about it, lest his kindness for him might extend to the granting him his pardon, and thereby a dangerous enemy to the Perfians be again let loofe to embarrass their affairs. And that it would have so happened as they conjectured, did afterwards appear: for when his head was brought to Darius, he expressed great displeasure against the authors of his death, and caused his head to be honourably buried, as the remains of a man that had much merited from him. How he was the cause of the Ionian war, and what was his aim herein, hath been above related. On the breaking out of that revolt; and the burning of Sardis, 2 Darius understanding that Aristagoras, the deputy of Hestiæus, was at the head of it, doubted not but that Hestiæus himfelf was at the bottom of the whole contrivance, and therefore fent for him, and charged him with it: but he managed the matter fo craftily with Darius, as to make him believe, not only that he was innecent, but that the whole cause of this revolt was, that he was not there to have hindered it: for he told him, that the matter appeared plainly to have been long a brewing; that they had waited only for his absence to put it in execution; that, if he had continued at Miletus, it could never have happened; and that the only way to restore his affairs in those parts was to fend him thither to appeale these combustions; which he promifed not only to do, but to deliver Aristagoras into his hands, and make the great island of Sardinia to become tributary to him; fwearing, that, if he were fent on this voyage, he would not change his garments till all were effected that he had faid. By which fair speech Darius being deceived, b gave him permission to return into Ionia. On his arrival at Sardis, his bufy head fet him at work to contrive a plot against the government there, and he had drawn feveral of the Perfi ns into it: but, in some discourse which he had with Artaphernes, finding that he was no stranger to the part which he had acted in the Ionian revol+, he thought it not fafe for him any longer to tarry at Sardis; and therefore, the next night after getting privately away, he fled to the fea coast, and got over to the island of Chius. But the Chians, mistrusting that his coming thither was to act some part for the interest of Davius among them, feized on his person, and put him in prison; but alterward !!

Herodot, lib. 5. b Herodot, lib. 6:

afterwards, being fatisfied how he was engaged to the contrary, they fet him again at liberty. Hereon he fent one whom he had confidence in, with letters to Sardis, to those Persians whom he had corrupted while he was there; but the person whom he trusted deceiving him, delivered the letters to Artaphernes; whereby the plot being discovered, and all the persons concerned in it put to death, he failed of this defign. But thinking still he could do great matters, were he at the head of the Ionian league, in order to the gaining of this point, he got the Chians to convey him to Miletus. But the Milefians, having had their liberty restored to them by Aristagoras, would by no means run the hazard of lofing it again, by receiving him into the city: whereon, endeavouring in the night to enter by force, he was repulfed, and wounded, and thereby forced to return again to Chius. While he was there, being asked the reason why he fo earnestly pressed Aristagoras to revolt, and thereby brought fo great a calamity upon Ionia, he told them, it was because the king had resolved to remove the Ionians into Phœnicia, and to bring the Phonicians into Ionia, and give them that country; which was wholly a fiction of his own deviling; for Darius had never any fuch intention: but it very well ferved his purpose, first to excuse himself, and next to excite the Ionians with the greater firmness and vigour to profecute the war; which accordingly had its effect: for the Ionians hearing that their country was to be taken from them, and given to the Phenicians, were exceedingly alarmed at it; and therefore refolved, with the utmost of their power, to stand to their defence. However, Hestiaus finding the Chians not any way inclined to trust him with any of their naval forces, as he defired of them, he paffed over to the ifle of Lesbus; and, having there gained eight thips, he failed with them to Byzantium, where, making prize of all the ships that passed the Bosphorus, either to or from the Euxine sea, excepting only such as belonged to those who were confederated with him, he did there, in a short tine, grow to a great power. But, on his hearing of the taking of Miletus, he left the conduct of his affairs in those parts to a deputy, and failed to Chius; and, after fome little opposition at his first landing, made himself matter of the island, the Chians, by reason of the loss they had lately sustained in the sea fight against the Persians at Lada, being too weak at that time to refift him. From thence he failed with a great army of Ionians and Æolians to Thafus, an island on the Thracian coast, and laid fiege to the chief city of that ifland: but hearing that the Phoenician fleet, in the fervice of the Persians, was failed to take in the islands on the Afian coast, he raised the siege, and failed back to Leibus with all his forces, to defend that place;

from whence passing over into the continent which was oppofite to it, to plunder the country, Harpagus, one of the Persian generals, who happened then to be there with a great army, fell upon him; and, having routed his forces, and taken him prife ter, fent him to Sardis, where he met with the fate which I has a mentioned. He was a man of the best head, and the most enterprifing genius of any of his age; but he having wholly employed these abilities to lay plots and designs, which produced great mischiefs in the world, for the obtaining of little aims of his own, it happened to him, as most at the end it doth to fuch refined politicians, who, while they are fpinning fine webs of politics for the bringing about of their felf defigns, often find them to become fnares to their own destruction; for the providence of the wifest of men being too short to over-reach the providence of God, he often permits such Ahithophels, for the punishment of their presumption, as well as their malice. to perifh by their own devices. And fo it happened to Machiavel, the famous mafter of our modern politicians, who, after all his politics, died in jail for want of bread. And thus may it happen to all elfe, who make any other maxims than those of truth and justice to be the rules of their politics.

After the Phænician fleet had subdued all the islands on the Asian coast, Artaphernes a sent them to reduce the Hellespont, that is, all its coasts on the European side, for those on the Asian had been already brought Anno 495. Darius 27.

their

fide, for those on the Asian had been already brought under by the armies at land: which Militades, prince of the Thracian Cherfonefus, having advice of, and that the fleet was come as far as Tenedos to put these orders in execution, he thought not fit to tarry their arrival, as being too weak to refift fo great a power; but immediately carried all that he had on board five ships, and fet sail with them for Athens. But, in his passage, one of them, commanded by Metiochus, his eldest son, was taken by the Phænicians, and Metiochus was carried to Darius to Susa; but, instead of doing him any hurt, he generoufly gave him an house, and lands also for his maintenance. and married him to a Persian lady, with whom he there lived in an honourable state all his life after, and never more returned into Greece. In the interim Miltiades, with his other four ships, got fafe to Athens, and there again fettled himfelf; for he was a citizen of that city, and of one of the most honourable families in it. Miltiades, his father, Cimon's elder brother by the fame mother (for they had different fathers), was the first of the Athenians that fettled in the Thracian Chersonesus, being called thither by the Dolonces, the inhabitants of the country, to be their prince, who, dying without iffue, left his principality to Stefagoras, his nephew, the eldeft fon of his brother Cimon: he dying also without children, the fons of Pisistratus, who then governed at Athens, fent this Miltiades's brother thither to fucceed him; where he arrived, and fettled himfelf in that year in which Darius entered on his war against the Scythians, in which expedition he accompanied him with his ships to the Danube, as hath been above faid. Three years after he was driven out by the Scythians; but being afterwards brought back, and restored again by the Dolonces, he continued there till this time, and then was finally dispossessed by the Phænicians. While he lived in the Cherfonefus, he married, for his fecond wife, Hegefipyla, the daughter of Olorus, a Thracian king in the neighbourhood, by whom a he had Cimon, the famous general of the Athenians. After the death of Miltiades, the had, by a fecond husband, a fon, called also Olorus, by the name of his grandfather, who was the father of Thucydides, the historian. She could not have had them both by the same husband; for Cimon and Thucydides, and confequently Olorus, were of two different tribes, and therefore they could not be both descended from Miltiades.

^a Herodot. lib. 6. Cornelius Nepos in Miltiade.

Darius, recalling all his other generals, b fent Mardonius, the fon of Gobrias, a young Persian nobleman, who Anno 494. had lately married one of his daughters, to be the Darius 28. chief commander in all the maritime parts of Afia, with orders to invade Greece, and revenge him on the Athenians and Eretrians for the burning of Sardis. On his arrival at the Hellespont, all his forces being there rendezvoused for the execution of these orders, he marched with his land forces through Thrace into Macedonia, ordering his fleet first to take in Thasus, and then follow after him, and coast it by sea, as he marched by land, that each might be at hand to act in concert with each other, for the profecuting of the end proposed by this war. On his arrival in Macedonia, all that country dreading fo great a power, fubmitted to him. But the fleet, after they had fubdued Thafus, as they were paffing farther on towards the coarts of Macedonia, on their doubling of the cape of Mount Athos, now called Capo Santo, met there with a terrible florm, which destroyed 300 of their ships, and above 20,000 of their men. And at the same time Mardonius fell into no less a misfortune by land: for, lying with his army in an encampment not fufficiently fecured, the Thracians took the advantage of it, and, falling on him in the night, broke into his camp, and flew a great number of his men, and wounded Mardonius

² Plutarchus in Cimone.

Mardonius himself; by which losses being disabled for any farther action either by sea or land, he was forced to march back again into Asia, without gaining any honour or advantage, either to himself, or the king's affairs, by this expedition.

- Darius, before he would make any farther attempt upon the Grecians, a to make trial which of them would fub-mit to him, and which would not, fent heralds to all Darius 29. their cities, to demand earth and water; which was the form whereby the Persians used to require the submission of those whom they would have yield to them. On the arrival of these heralds, several of the Grecian cities, dreading the power of the Persians, did as was required of them. But when those who were fent to Athens and Lacedæmon came thither with this commission, they slung them, the one into a well, and the other into a deep pit, and bid them fetch earth and water thence. But this being done in the heat of their rage, they repented of it, when come to a cooler temper: for thus to put heralds to death, was a violation of the law of nations, for which they were afterwards condemned even by themselves, as well as all their neighbours, and would gladly have made any satisfaction for the wrong, that would have been accepted of; and the Lacedæmonians fent a person of purpose to Susa to make an offer hereof.

Darius, on the hearing of the ill fuccess of Mardonius, suspecting the sufficiency of his conduct, b recalled him from his command, and sent two other generals in Anno 492. his stead, to prosecute the war against the Grecians, Datis a Median, and Artaphernes a Persian, the son of that Artaphernes's brother, who was lately governor of Sardis, and gave them particularly in charge not to sail of executing his revenge on the Athenians, and the Eretrians, whom he could never forgive for the part which they had in the burning of Sardis. On their arrival on the coasts of Ionia, they there drew together an army of 300,000 men, and a sleet of 600 ships, and made the best preparations they could for this expedition against the Grecians.

In the beginning of the next fpring, c the two Persian generals having shipped their army, rendezvoused their whole sleet at Samos, and from thence sailed to Darius 31. Naxus; and, having there burned the chief city of the island, and all their temples, and taken in all the other islands

^a Herodotus, lib. 7.

b Herodotus, lib.6. Plutarchus in Aristide.Cornelius Nepos in Miltiade.

Herodotus, lib.6. Plutarchus in Aristide et Themistocle. Cornelius Nepos in Miltiade.

in those seas, they shaped their course directly for Eretria; and, after a siege of sevendays, took the city by the treachery of some of its chief inhabitants, and burnt it to the ground, making all that they sound in it captives. And then, passing over into Attica, they were led, by the guidance of Hippias, the late tyrant of Athens, into the plain of Marathon; where being met and sought with by 10,000 Athenians, and 1000 Plateans, under the leading of Miltiades, who was lately prince of the Thracian Chersonesus, they were there overthrown by this small number with a great slaughter, and forced to retreat to their ships, and sail back again into Asia with bassle and disgrace, having lost in this expedition, a faith Trogus, by the sword, shipwreck, and other ways, 200,000 men. But b Herodotus tells us, they were no more than 6400 that were slain in the field of battle; of which Hippias was one, who was the chief exciter and conductor of this war.

Datis and Artaphernes, on their return into Asia, c that they might shew some fruit of this expedition, sent the Eretrians they had taken to Darius to Susa; who, without doing them any farther harm, sent them to dwell in a village of the region of Cissia, which was at the distance of about a day's journey from Susa, d where Apollonius Tyaneus sound their descendants still remaining a great many ages after.

Darius con his hearing of the unfucces ful return of his forces from Attica, instead of being discouraged by that or the other disasters that had happened unto him in his attempts upon the Grecians, added the deseat of Marathon to the burning of Sardis as a new cause to excite him with the greater vigour to carry on the war against them. And therefore, resolving in person to make an invasion upon them with all his power, he sent orders through all the provinces, to arm the whole empire for it. But, after three years had been spent in making these preparations, a new war

Anno 487. Darius 35. But Darius's heart was fo earnestly set against the Grecians, that resolving his new rebels should not divert him from executing his wrath upon his old enemies, he determined to make war against them both at the same time; and that, while part of his forces were sent to reduce Egypt, he would in person with the rest sall upon Greece. But he being now an old man, and there being a controversy between two of his sons, to which of them two the succession did belong, it was thought convenient.

² Justin, lib. 2. c. 9.

b Herodot. lib. 6.

F Herodot, lib, 6,

d Philostratus, lib. 1. c. 179

e Herodot. lib. 7.

convenient, that the matter fhould be determined before he did fet out on this expedition, lest otherwise, on his death, it might cause a civil war in the empire; for the preventing of which it was an ancient usage among the Persians, that, before their king. went out to any dangerous war, his successor should be declared. The matter in difpute a flood thus. Darius had three fons by his first wife, the daughter of Gobrias, all born before his advancement to the throne, and four others by Atoffa, the daughter of Cyrus, who were all born after it. Of the first Artabasanes (who is by some called Artemines, and by others Ariamenes) was the eldest, and of the latter Xerxes. Artabalanes urged that he was the eldest son; and therefore, according to the usage and custom of all nations, he ought to be preferred in the fuccession before the younger. To this Xerxes replied, that he was the fon of Darius by Atossa, the daughter of Cyrus, who was the first founder of the Persian empire; and therefore claimed in her right to fucceed his father in it; and that it was much more agreeable to justice, that the crown of Cyrus should come to a descendant of Cyrus, than to one who was not. And he farther added, that it was true, Artabasanes was the eldest fon of Darius; but that he was the eldest fon of the king: for Artabasanes was born while his father was only a private person, and therefore by that primogeniture could claim no more than to be heir to his private fortunes: but as to him, he was the first-born after his father was king, and therefore had the best right to succeed him in the kingdom. And for this he had an inflance from the Lacedæmonians, with whom it was the usage, that the sons of their kings, who were born after their advancement to the throne. should succeed before those who were born before it. And this last argument he was helped to by Damaratus, formerly king of Lacedæmon, who, having been unjuftly deposed by his fubjects, was then an exile in the Perfian court. Hereupon Xerxes was declared the fucceffor, though not fo much by the firength of his plea, as by the influence which his mother Atofla had over the inclinations of Darius, who was absolutely governed in this matter by the authority she had with him. That which was most remarkable in this contest was, the friendly and amicable manner with which it was managed: for, during the whole time that it lasted, all the marks of a most entire fraternal affection paffed between the two brothers; and, when it was decided, as the one did not infult, so neither did the other repine, or exprefs any anger or discontent on the judgement given; and although the elder brother loft the cause, yet he cheerfully submitted ted to the determination, wished his brother joy, and, without diminishing his friendship or affection to him, ever after adhered to his interest, and at last died in his service, being slain righting for him in the Grecian war; which is an example very rarely to be met with, where so great a prize is at stake, as that of a crown; the ambitious desire of which is usually of that force with the most of mankind, as to make them break through all other considerations whatsoever, where there is any the least pretence to it, to reach the attainment.

² Herodotus, lib γ. Justin, lib. 2. c. το. Plutarchus in Artaxerxe et in Apophtnegm, περί φιλαδελρίας.

After the fuccession was thus settled, and all were ready to set out both for the Egyptian, as well as the Grecian war, Darius 36. Darius fell sick and died, in the second year after the Egyptian revolt, having then reigned b 36 years; and Xerxes, according to the late determination, quietly succeeded in the throne. There are writers, c who place this determination after the death of Darius, and say, that it was settled by the judgement of Artabanus, uncle to the two contending princes, who was made the arbitrator between them in this contest. But Herodotus, who lived the nearest those times of all that have written of it, positively tells us, that it was decided by Darius himself a little before his death. And his decision being that which was most likely to have the greatest authority in this matter, Herodotus's account of it seemeth the much more probable of the two.

Darius was a prince of wisdom, clemency, and justice, and hath the honour a to have his name recorded in holy writ, for a favourer of God's people, arestorer of his temple at Jerusalem, and a promoter of his worship therein: for all which, God was pleased to make him his instrument: and in respect hereof, I doubt not, it was, that he blessed him with a numerous issue, a long reign, and great prosperity; for although he were not altogether so fortunate in his wars against the Scythians and the Grecians, yet every where else he had full success in all his undertakings, and not only restored and throughly settled the empire of Cyrus, after it had been much shaken by Cambyses and the Magian, but also added many large and rich provinces to it, especially those of India, Thrace, Macedon, and the isses of the Ionian sea.

The Jews chave a tradition, that in the last year of Darius Jied the prophets Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi; that thereon

² Herodot. lib. 7.

b Ptolm. in Canone, Africanus, Eufeb. &c.

f Justin, lib. 2. c. 10. Plutarchus περί γίλαδελφίας.

d Ezra v. and in the prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah. Abraham Zacutus in Juchafia, David Ganz in Zemach David. Seedar Olam Zuta, &c.

on ceased the spirit of prophecy from among the children of Israel; and that this was the oblignation or fealing up of vision and prophecy a fpoken of by the prophet Daniel. And, from the fame tradition, they tell us, that the kingdom of the Persians ceafed also the same year; for they will have it, that this was the Darius whom Alexander conquered; and that the whole continuance of the Persian empire was only 52 years; which they reckon thus: Darius the Median reigned one year, Cyrus three years, Cambyfes (who they fay was the Ahafuerus who married Efther) 16 years, and Darius (whom they will have to be the fon of Efther) 32 years. And this last Darius, according to them, was the Artaxerxes who fent Ezra and Nehemiah to Jerufalem, to restore the state of the Jews; for they tell us, that Artaxerxes, among the Perfians, was the common name of their kings, as that of Pharaoh was among the Egyptians. This shews how ill they have been acquainted with the affairs of the Perfian empire. And their countryman Josephus, in the account which he gives of those times, feems to have been but very little better informed concerning them.

In the time of his reign first appeared in Persia the famous prophet of the Magians, whom the Perfians call Zerdusht, or Zaratush, and the Greeks, Zoroastres. The Greek and Latin writers much differ about him, some of them b will have it. that he lived many ages before, and was king of Bactria, and others that there were c feveral of the name, who lived in feveral ages, all famous in the same kind. But the oriental writers, who should best know, a all unanimously agree, that there was but one Zerdusht or Zoroastres; and that the time in which he flourished, was while Darius Hystaspis was king of Perfia. It is certain he was no king, but one born of mean and obscure parentage, who did raise himself wholly by his craft in carrying on that imposture with which he deceived the world. They who place him so high as the time of Ninus, by whom, they say, he was flain in battle, follow the authority of Justin for it. But Diodorus Siculus, out of Ctesias, tells us, that the king of Bactria, with whom Ninus had war, was called Oxyartes: and there are some ancient manuscripts of Justin f in which it is read Oxyartes, and perchance that was the genuine reading, and Zoroaffres b Justin, lib. 1. c. 1. Diog. Laertius in Proæmia, Plin. lib. 30. c. 1.

² Daniel ix. 24.

Plin. lib. 36. c. r. See Stanley of the Chaldaic Philosophy, c. 2.

4 Abulfaragius, Ishmael Abulfeda, Sharestani, &c.; vide etiam Agathian, lib. 2. et Thomman Hyde de Religione veterum Perfarum, c. 24.

Lib. 2. p. 94.
So faith Ligerius.

Zoroastres came into the text instead of it, by the error of the copier, led thereto perchance by a note in the margin placed there by some critic, who, from the character of the person, took upon him to alter the name; for he is there said, Artes Magicas primo invenise, i. e. That he was the first inventor of Magianism; which Zoroastres only was generally taken to be, though in truth he was not the sounder of that sect, but only the restorer and resormer of it, as shall be hereaster shewn.

He was the greatest impostor, except Mahomet, that ever appeared in the world, and had all the craft and enterprising boldnefs of that Arab, but much more knowledge; for he was excellently skilled in all the learning of the East that was in his time; whereas the other could neither write nor read; and particularly he was throughly verfed in the Jewish religion, and in all the facred writings of the Old Testament that were then extant, which makes it most likely, that he was, as to his origin, a Jew. And it is generally faid of him, that he had been a fervant to one of the prophets of Israel, and that it was by this means that he came to be fo well skilled in the holy scriptures, and all other Jewish knowledge; which is a farther proof, that he was of that people; it not being likely, that a prophet of Ifrael should entertain him as a servant, or instruct him as a disciple, if he were not of the same seed of Israel, as well as of the same religion with him; and that especially since it was the usage of that people, by principle of religion, as well as by long received custom among them, to separate themselves from all other nations, as far as they were able. And it is farther to be taken notice of, that most of those who speak of his original, a say, that he was of Palestine, within which country the land of Judea was. And all this put together, amounts with me to a convincing proof, that he was first a Jew, and that by birth, as well as religion, before he took upon him to be prophet of the Magian fect.

The prophet of Israel, to whom he was a servant, some b say, was Elias, and c others Ezra: but as the former was too early, so the other was too late for the time in which he lived. With this best agreeth what is said by a third fort of writers, d that it was one of the disciples of Jeremiah with whom he served; and, if so, it must have been either Ezekiel or Daniel; for, besides these two, there was no other prophet of Israel in those times, who could have been

^a Religio veterum Perfarum per Thomam Hyde, c. 24.

b Abulfaragius, p. 54.

Abu Mohammed Mustapha, Historicus Arab. Religio veterum Perfarum, c. 24. p. 313.

d Bundari ex Abu Japhar Tabarita Historico Arabe. Relig. vet. Perf.

been of the disciples of Jeremiah. And as Daniel was of age sufficient at his carrying away to Babylon (he having been then about 18 years old), to have been sometime before under the discipline and tutorage of that prophet; fo, having continued till about the end of the reign of Cyrus, he lived long enough to have been contemporary with this impostor; which cannot be' faid of Ezekiel: for we hear nothing more of him after the 27th year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, which was the year next after the taking of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar; and therefore it is most likely, that he lived not much beyond that time. It must therefore be Daniel under whom this impostor served; and befides him there was not any other mafter in those times, under whom he could acquire all that knowledge, both in things facred and profane, which he was fo well furnished with. doubt, his feeing that great, good, and wife man arrive to fuch an Leight and dignity in the empire, by being a true prophet of God, was that which did fet this crafty wretch upon the defign of being a false one; hoping that, by acting this part well, he might obtain the fame advancement, and by pretending to that which the other really was, arrive to the like honour and greatness; and it must be said, that, by his crast and dexterity in managing this pretence, he wonderfully fucceeded in what he aimed at. It is faid, that, while he ferved the prophet, under whom he was bred, he did, by fome evil action, a draw on him his curse, and that thereon he was finitten with leprofy. But they who tell us this, feem to be fuch, who finding Eliah faid to be his master, mistook Elisha for Eliah, and therefore thought Gehazi to have been the person.

He did not found a new religion, as his successor in imposture Mahomet did, but b only took upon him to revive and reform an old one, that of the Magians, which had been for many ages past the ancient national religion of the Medes, as well as of the Persians; for it having fallen under disgrace on the death of those ringleaders of that sect, who had usurped the sovereignty after the death of Cambyses, and the slaughter which was then made of all the chief men among them, it sunk so low, that it became almost extinct, and Sabianism every where prevailed against it, Darius and most of his followers on that occasion going over to it. But the affection which the people had for the religion of their forefathers, and which they had been all brought up in, not being easily to be rooted out, Zoroastres saw, that

^a Megidi Perfa, Buddari. Abu Mohammed Mustapha. Religio vet. Perf. c. 24. p. 113. 114. 115.

b Vidi Pocockii Specimen Historiæ Arabicæ, p. 147-149, et Thomam Hyde de Religione veterum Perfarum, the revival of this was the best game of imposture that he could then play; and, having so good an old stock to graft upon, he did with the greater ease make all his new scions to grow, which he inserted into it.

He first a made his appearance in Media, now called Aderbijan, in the city of Xix, say some; in that of Ecbatana, now Tauris, say others: for Smerdis having been of that province, it is most likely that the sect which he was of had still there its best rooting; and therefore the impostor thought he might in those parts, with the best success, attempt the revival of it. And his sirst appearing here is that which I suppose hath given some the handle to affert, that this was the country in which he was born.

The chief reformation which he made in the Magian religion was b in the first principle of it: for whereas before they had held the being of two first causes, the first light, or the good god, who was the author of all good; and the other darkness, or the evil god, who was the author of all evil; and that of the mixture of these two, as they were in a continual struggle with each other, all things were made; he introduced a principle superior to them both, one supreme God, who created both light and darkness, and out of these two, according to the alone pleasure of his own will, made all things elfe that are, according to what is faid in the 45th chapter of Ifaiah, v. 5. 6. 7. "I am the Lord, and there is none elfe: there is no God besides me; I girded thee, though thou hast not known me, that they may know from the rifing of the fun, and from the west, that there is none besides me. I am the Lord, and there is none elfe. I form the light and create darkness, I make peace and create evil, I the Lord do all these things." For these words being directed to Cyrus, king of Persia, must be understood as spoken in reference to the Perfian fect of the Magians, who then held light and darkness, or good and evil, to be the supreme beings, without acknowledgeing the great God who is superior to both. And I doubt not it was from hence that Zoroaftres had the hint of mending this great absurdity in their theology. But to avoid making God the author of evil, his doctrine was, c that God originally and directly created only light or good, and that darkness or evil followed it by confequence, as the shadow doth the person; that light or good had only a real production from God, and the

³ Bundari. Abu Japhar Tabarita. Religio vet. Perf. c. 24. Golii Notæ in Alfraganum, p. 207. & 227.

b Abul Feda Ebu Shahna. Pocockii Specimen Historiæ Arab. p. 147-548. Religio vet. Perf. c. 9. p. 163. & c. 22. p. 299.

⁶ Shahriftani. Religio vet. Perfarum, c. 22. p. 299, other afterwards resulted from it, as the defect thereof. In sum, his doctrine as to this particular was, a that there was one fupreme Being independent and felf-existing from all eternity. That b under him there were two angels, one the angel of light, who is the author and director of all good; and the other the angel of darkness, who is the author and director of all evil; and that these two, out of the mixture of light and darkness, made all things that are; that they are in a perpetual ftruggle with each other; and that where the angel of light prevails, there the most is good, and where the angel of darkness prevails. there the most is evil; that this struggle shall continue to the end of the world; that c then there shall be a general refurrection, and d a day of judgement, wherein just retribution shall be rendered to all according to their works; after which e the angel of darkness, and his disciples, shall go into a world of their own, where they shall fuffer in everlasting darkness the punishments of their evil deeds; and the angel of light, and his disciples. shall also go into a world of their own, where they shall receive in everlasting light the reward due unto their good deeds: and that after this they shall remain separated for ever, and light and darkness be no more mixed together to all eternity. And all f this the remainder of that fect, which is now in Persia and India, do without any variation, after fo many ages, still hold even to this day. And how confonant this is to the truth, is plain enough to be understood without a comment. And whereas he taught, that God originally created the good angel only, and that the other followed only by the defect of good, this plainly shews, that he was not unacquainted with the revolt of the fallen angels, and the entrance of evil into the world that way, but had been throughly instructed how that God at first created all his angels good, as he also did man, and that they that are now evil became such wholly through their own fault, in falling from that state which God first placed them in. All which plainly shews the author of this doctrine to have been well verfed in the facred writings of the Jewish religion, out of which it manifestly appears to have been all taken; only the crasty impostor took care to dress it up in such a style and form, as would ^{*} Abulfeda. Shahristani. Relig. vet. Pers. c. 22.

b Religio vet. Pers. c. 9. p. 163. Pocockii Specimen Historiæ Arabicæ, p. 148.

c Diogenes Laertius in Proæmio. Plutarchus in Ifide & Ofiride. Shahriftani. Relig. vet. Perf. c. 22. p. 296.

d Relig.vet. Perf. c. 33.

Shshriftani. Plutarchus de Ifide & Ofiride. Religio. vet. Perf. p. 299. 345. &c. f Relig. vet. Perf. c. 22. p. 292. 293. Ovington's Travels.

make it best agree with that old religion of the Medes and Persians which he grafted it upon.

Another reformation which he made in the Magian religion, was, a that he caused fire-temples to be built wherever he came: for whereas hitherto they had erected their altars, on which their facred fire was kept, on the tops of hills, and on high places in the open air, and there performed all the offices of their religious worship, where, often by rain, tempests, and storms, the facred fire was extinguished, and the holy offices of their religion interrupted and disturbed; for the preventing of this he directed, that wherever any of those altars were erected, temples should be built over them, that so the sacred fires might be the better preserved, and the public offices of their religion the better performed before them. For all the parts of their public worship were performed before these public facred fires, as all their private devotions were before private fires in their own houses; not that they worshipped the fire (for this they always disowned), but God in the fire. For b Zoroastres, among other his impostures, having feigned, that he was taken up into heaven, there to be instructed in those doctrines which he was to deliver unto men, he pretended not (as Mahomet after did) there to have feen God, but only to have heard him speaking to him out of the midst of a great and most bright slame of fire; and therefore taught his followers, that fire was the truest Sheebinab of the divine presence; that the sun being the perfectest fire, God had there of the throne of his glory, and the residence of his divine prefence, in a more excellent manner than any where elfe, and, next that, in the elementary fire with us; and for this reason he ordered them still to direct all their worship to God, first towards the sun (which they called Mithra), and next towards their facred fires, as being the things in which God chiefly dwelt; and their ordinary way of worship was to do so towards both: for when they came before thefe fires to worship, they always approached them on the west side, that, having their faces towards them, and also toward the rising fun at the fame time, they might direct their worship towards both. And in this posture they always performed every act of their worship. But this was not a new inflitution of his: for thus to worship before fire and the fun, was, as hath been faid, the ancient ufage of that feet; and according hereto is it, that we are to understand what we find in Ezekiel viii. 16. where it is related, that the prophet being carried in a vision to Jerusalem, to see the abominations of that place, among other impieties, had there thewn him " about five and twenty men flanding between the porch and the altar, with their backs towards the temple of the Lord, and their faces towards the cast; and they worshipped the fun." The meaning of which is, that they had turned their backs upon the true worship of God, and had gone over to that of the Magians. For the holy of holies (in which was the Shechinah of the divine prefence resting over the mercy feat), being on the western end of the temple at Jerusalem, all that entered thither to worship God did it with their faces turned that way: for that was their a Kebla, or the point towards which they always directed their worthip. But the Kebla of the Magians being the rifing fun, they always worthipped with their faces turned that way, that is, towards the cast. And therefore these twenty-five men, by altering their Kobla, are shewn to have altered their religion, and, instead of worshipping God according to the Jewish religion, to have gone over to the religion and worship of the Magians.

^a Religio vet. Perf. c. 1. c. 8. & c. 29. ^b Religio vet. Perf. c. 8. p. 160.

Santon in the present State of Persia, p. 185. Religio vet. Pers c. 4.

Zoroaftres having thus retained, in his reformation of Magianism, the ancient usage of that sect in worshipping God before fire, to give the facred fires in the temples which he had erected the greater veneration, he pretended, that, when he was in heaven, and there heard God speaking to him out of the midft of fire, he b brought thence some of that fire with him on his return, and placed it on the altar of the first fire temple that he erected (which was that at Xix in Media), from whence they fay it was propagated to all the rest. And this is the reason which is given for their so careful keeping of it: d for their priests watch it day and night, and never fuffer it to go out or be extinguished. And for the same rea-Son also they did treat it with that superstition, that they fed it only with 'wood stripped of its bark, and of that fort which they thought most clean; and they never f did blow it, either with bellows or with their breath, for fear of polluting it: and to do this either of those ways, or to cast any unclean thing into it, was no less than death by the law of the land, VOL. I.

a Kebia, among the eastern nations, fignifieth the point of the heavens towar is which they directed their worthip. The fews did it towards the temple at Jerufilem, the Mahometans towards Mecca, the Sabian towards the Meridian, and the Meriaus towards the riding fun.

b Religio vet. Ferf. c. 3. p. 160.

Golfi Notes ad Alfraganum, p. 227.

4 Strabo, lib. 13. Ammianus Marcellinue, lib. 23. Agathia, lib. 3-

Religio vet. Perf. c. 28. p. 351. and c. 29. p. 355, Strabo, lib. 15. Religio vet. Perf. lbid, as long as those of that fect reigned in it, which, from the time of Zoroastres, to the death of Yazdejerd, the last Persian king of the Magian religion, was about 1150 years; yea, it went fo far, a that the priests themselves never approached this fire, but with a cloth over their mouths, that they might not breathe thereon; and this they did, not only when they tended the fire, to lay more wood thereon, or do any other fervice about it, but also when they approached it, to read the daily offices of their liturgy before it: fo that they mumbled over their prayers, rather than spoke them, in the same manner as the Popish priefts do their maffes, without letting the people prefent articulately hear one word of what they faid; and, if they should hear them, they would now as badly understand them; for all their public prayers are, even to this day, in the old Persian language, in which Zoroastres first composed them, above 2200 vears fince, of which the common people do not now understand one word: and in this absurdity also have they the Romanists partakers with them. When Zoroastres composed his liturgy, the old Perfic was then indeed the vulgar language of all those countries where this liturgy was used: and so was the Latin throughout all the western empire, when the Latin fervice was first used therein. But when the language changed, they would not confider, that the change which was made thereby, in the reason of the thing, did require that a change should be made in their liturgy also, but retained it the fame, after it ceased to be understood, as it was before. So it was the superstitious folly of adhering to old establishments against reason that produced this absurdity in both of them: though it must be acknowledged, that the Magians have more to fay for themselves in this matter than the Romanists; for they are taught, that their liturgy was brought them from heaven, which the others do not believe of theirs, though they flick to it as if it were. And if that stiffness of humour, which is now among too many of us, against altering any thing in our liturgy, should continue, it must at last bring us to the same pass: for all languages being in fluxu, they do in every age alter from what they were in the former; and therefore, as we do not now understand the English which was here spoken by our ancestors 300 or 400 years ago, so, in all likelihood, will not our posterity 300 or 400 years hence understand that which is now spoken by us. And therefore, should our liturgy be still continued, without any change or alteration, it will then be as much in an unknown language as now the Roman fervice is to the vulgar of that communion.

But

But, to return to the reformations of Zoroastres; how much he followed the Jewish platform in the traming of them, doth manifestly appear from the particulars I have mentioned; for most of them were taken, either from the facred writings, or the facred usages of that people. Moses heard God speaking to him out of a flame of fire from the bush, and all Israel heard him speaking to them in the same manner out of the midst of sire from mount Sinai: hence Zoroastres pretended to have heard God speaking to him also out of the midst of a slame of fire. The Jews had a visible Shechina of the divine presence among them resting over the mercy-teat in the holy of holies, both in their tabernacle and temple, toward which they offered up all their prayers; and therefore Zoroastres taught his Magians to pretend to the like, and to hold the fun, and the facred fires in their fire-temples, to be this Shechina in which God especially dwelt; and for this reason they offered up all their prayers to him with their faces turned towards both. The Jews had a facred fire which came down from heaven upon their altar of burnt-offerings, which they did there ever after, till the deflruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, inextinguishably maintain: and with this fire only were all their facrifices a d oblations made, and Nadab and Abihu were put thed with death for offering incense to God with other fire. And in like a anner Zoroaftres pretended to have brought his holy fire from heaven; and therefore commanded it to be kept with the same care. And to kindle fire on the altar of any new erected fire-temple, or to rekindle it on any fuch altar, where it had been by any nnavoidable accident extinguished, from any other fire, than from one of the facred fires in some other temple, or elle from the lun, was reckoned a crime to be punished in the same manner. And whereas great care was taken among the Jews, a that no wood should be used on their altar in the temple, but that which they reputed clean, and for this reason they had it all barked and examined before it was laid on; and that when it was laid on, the fire thould never be blowed up either with bellows or the breath of man for the kindling of it; hence Zoroastres b ordained both these particulars to be also observed in respect of his facred fire among his Magians, commanding them to use only barked wood for the maintaining of it, and no other means for the kindling of it up into a flaine, but the pouring on of oil and the blatts of the open air. And that he should in to many things write after the Jewith religion, or have been so well informed therein,

P 2

2218

a See Lightfoot's Temple-service.

Religio Veterum Perfarum, c. 29. & c. 39.

can fcarce feem probable, if he had not been first educated and brought up in it.

Zoroaftres, having thus taken upon him to be a prophet of God, fent to reform the old religion of the Persians, to gain the better reputation to his pretentions, a he retired into a cave, and there lived a long time as a recluse, pretending to be abftracted from all worldly confiderations, and to be given wholly to prayer and divine meditations; and, the more to amufe the people who there reforted to him, he dreffed up his cave with feveral mystical figures, representing Mithra, and other mysteries of their religion; from whence it became for a long while after a usage among them to choose such caves for their devotions, which being dreffed up in the fame manner, were called Mithratic caves. While he was in this retirement, he composed the book wherein all his pretended revelations are contained, which shall be hereafter spoken of. And Mahomet exactly followed his example herein; for he also retired to a cave some time before he broached his imposture, and, by the help of his accomplices, there formed the Alcoran, wherein it is contained. And b Pythagoras, on his return from Babylon to Samos, in imitation of his master Zoroastres (whom c Clemens Alexandrinus tells us he emuloufly followed), had there in like manner his cave to which he retired, and wherein he mostly abode both day and night, and for the same end as Zoroastres did in his, that is, to get himself the greater veneration from the people: for Pythagoras acted a part of imposture as well as Zoroaftres, and this perchance he also learned from him.

After he had thus acted the part of a prophet in Media, and there fettled all things according to his intentions, he removed from thence into d Bactria, the most eastern province of Perha, and there fettled in the city of Balch, which lies on the river Oxus, in the confines of Persia, India, and Cowaresmia; where, under the protection of Hyftaspes, the sather of Darius, he foon spread his imposture through all that province with great fuccefs: for although Darius, after the flaughter of the Magians, had, with most of his fellowers, gone over to the feet of the Sabians; yet Hyftalpes fell adhered to the religion of his anceftors, and, having fixed his refidence at Balch (where it may be suppofed he governed those parts of the empire under his son), did there support and promote it to the utmost of his power. And, in order

Porphyrlus in libro de Nympharum Antro, p. 254. Edit. Cant.
 Porphyrlus in Vita Pythagoræ, p. 184. Edit. Cantab. Jamblichus

in Vita Pythagore, c. 5.

c Stom. 1. p. 223.

d Abu Japhar Tabarita. Bundari. Relig. vet. Perf. c. 24-

der to give it the greater reputation, a he went in person into India among the Brachmans, and, having there learned from them all their knowledge in mathematics, aftronomy, and narural philosophy, he brought it back among his Magians, and throughly instructed them in it. And they continued for many ages after, above all others of those times, skilful in these sciences, especially after they had been farther inflructed in them by Zoroaftres, who was the greatest mathematician, and the greatest philosopher of the age in which he lived; and therefore took care to improve his fest, not only in their religion, but also in all natural knowledge; which so much advanced their credit in the world, that thenceforth a learned man and a Magian became equivalent terms. And this proceeded to far, that the vulgar looking on their knowledge to be more than natural, entertained an opinion of them, as if they had been actuated and inspired by supernatural powers, in the same manner as, too frequently among us, ignorant people are apt to give great scholars, and such as are learned beyond their comprehenfions (as were Friar Bacon, b Dr Faustus, and c Cornenelius Agrippa), the name of conjurers. And from hence those who really practised wicked and diabolical arts, or would be thought to do fo, taking the name of Magians, drew on it that ill fignification, which now the word Magician bears among us; whereas the true and ancient Magians d were the great mathematicians, philosophers, and divines, of the ages in which they lived, and had no other knowledge but what by their own fludy, and the instructions of the ancients of their fect, they had improved themselves in.

But it is not to be underflood, that all Magians, that is, all of the fcct, were thus learned, but only those who had this name by way of eminence above the rest, that is, their priests; for they being all of the same tribe, as among the Jews (none but

P'3 the

b John Faust was the first inventor of printing at Mentz, and from thence being taken for a conjurer, that story is here in England made of him, which goes under the name of Dr Faustus.

That which contributes most to the opinion, that Cornelius Agrippa was a Magician, is an importance t book published under his name, intitled, De Occuita Philosophia, which that learned man was never the author of; for it is not to be found in the folio edition of his works, in which only those that are genuine and truly his are contained.

d Dion Chryfoltomus tells us (in Oratione Borrflhenica), that the Perfians call them Magians who are skilled in the worship of the gods, and not as the Greeks, who being ignorant of the meaning of the word, call them so who were skilful in gotic Magic, i. c. that which juglers and conjurers pretend to make use of.

Religio vet. Perf. c. 30. p. 367. Theodoreti Hift. Ecclef. lib, 5. c. 33, ² Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 23.

the fon of a priest being capable of being a priest among them), they mostly appropriated their learning to their own families, transmitting it in them from father to son, and seldom communicating it to any other, unless it were to those of the royal family, a whom they were bound to instruct, the better to fix them for government; and therefore there were some of them, as tutors as well as chaplains, always refiding in the palaces of their kings. And whether it were, that these Magians thought it would bring the greater credit to them, or the kings, that it would add a greater facredness to their persons, or whether it were from both these causes, the royal family among the Perfians, as long as this fect prevailed among them, was always reckoned of the facerdotal tribe. They were divided into b three orders. The lowest were the inferior clergy, who served in all the common offices of their divine worship: next above them were the fuperintender ts, who in their feveral diffricts governed the inferior clergy, as the bishops do with us: and above all was the Archimagus, or arch-priest, who, in the same manner as the high priest among the Jews, or the Pope now among the Romanists, was the head of the whole religion. And, according to the number of their orders, the churches or temples in which they officiated were also of three forts. The lowest fort were the parochial churches, or oratories, which were ferved by the inferior clergy, as the parochial churches are now with us; and the duties which they there perforned were to read the daily offices out of their liturgy, and, at stated and folemn times, to read some part of their facred writings to the people. In these churches there were no fire altars; but the facred fire, before which they here worshipped, was maintained only in a lamp. Next above these were their fire temples, in which fire was continually kept burning on a facred altar. And these were, in the sale manner as cathedrals with us, the churches or temples where the superintendents resided. In every one of these were also several of the inferior clergy entertained, who, in the same manner as the choral vicars among us, performed all the divine offices under the superintendent, and also took care of the facred fire, which they constantly watched day and night by four and four in their turns, that it might always be kept burning, and never go out. highest church above all was the fire temple, where the Archimagus refided, which was had in the same veneration with them as the temple of Mecca among the Mahometans, to which every one of that fect thought themselves obliged to make a pilgrimage once in their lives. Zoroastres first settled it at Balch, and there he, as their Archimagus, usually had his residence. But after the Mahometans had over-run Persia, in the 7th century after Christ, the Archimagus was forced to remove from thence into Kerman, which is a province in Persia, lying upon the Southern ocean, towards India, and there it hath continued even to this day. And to the fire temple there erected, at the place of his residency, do they now pay the same veneration as formerly they did to that of Balch. This temple of the Archimagus, as also the other fire temples, were endued with large revenues in lands: but the parochial clergy depended solely on the tithes and offerings of the people; for this usage also had Zoroastres taken from the Jewish church, and made it one of his establishments among his Magians.

Religio vet. Perf. cap. 28. & cap. 30.

Plato in Alcibiade, 1. Stobwus, p. 496. Elemens Alexandrinus in Pudagogo 1, p. 21.

The impostor having thus settled his new scheme of Magianifin throughout the province of Bactria, with the fame fuccels as he had before in Media, he a went next to the royal court at Sufa, where he managed his pretentions with that craft, addrefs, and infinuation, that he foon got within Darius himself, and made him a profelyte to his new reformed religion; whose example, in a short time, drew after it into the same profession the courtiers, nobility, and all the great men of the kingdom. This happened in the 30th year of Darius; and, although it succeeded not without great opposition from the ringleaders of the Sabians, who were the opposite sect, yet the craft, address, and dexterity of the impostor furmounted them all, and so fettled his new device, that thenceforth it became the national religion of all that country, and fo continued for many ages after, till this imposture was at last supplanted by that of Mahomet, which was raifed almost by the same arts. They who professed this religion b in Lucian's time, as reckoned up by him, were the Perfians, the Parthians, the Bastrians, the Cowarefmians, the Arians, the Sacans, the Medes, and many other barbarous nations; but, fince that, the new imposture hath grown up to the fuppressing of the old in all these countries. However, there is a remnant of these Magians still remaining in Persia and India, who even to this day observe the same religion which Zoroastres first taught them; for they still have his book, wherein their religion is contained, which they keep and reverence in the fame manner as the Christians do the Bible, and the Mahometans the Alcoran, making it the fole rule both of their faith and manners.

This book the impostor composed while he lived in his P 4 retirement

² Religio vet. Perf. c. 24.

b Lucian de Longævis.
c Religio vet. Perf. c. 25. & 26.

retirement in the cave; and therein are contained all his prerended revelations. When he prefented it to Darius, it was bound up in twelve volumes, whereof each confifted of 100 skins of vellum; for it a was the usage of the Persians in those times to write all on fkins. This book is called Zendavesta, and, by contraction, Zend; the vulgar pronounce it Zundaveftow, and Zund. The word originally fignifieth a fire-kindler. fuch as is a tinder-box with us; which fantastical name the impostor gave it, because, as he pretended, all that would read this book, and meditate thereon, might from thence, as from a fire-kindler, kindle in their hearts the fire of all true love for God and his holy religion. For the better understanding of which, it is to be observed, that, in those eastern countries, their way of kindling fire, is not by a tinder-box, as with us, but by rubbing two pieces of cane one against another, till one of them takes fire: and fuch a fire-kindler of his religion in the hearts of men the impostor would have his book to be; and therefore called it by that name. The first part of it contains their liturgy, which is still used among them in all their oratories and fire-temples even to this day. The rest treats of all other parts of their religion. And according as their actions do agree or difagree with this book, do they reckon them to be either good or evil. Thence, in their language, they call a righteous action Zend-aver, i. e. what the book Zend allows, and an evil action Na-Zend-aver, i. e. which the book Zend difallows. This book Zoroaftres feigned to have received from heaven, as Mahomet afterwards (perchance following his pattern) pretended of his Alcoran. It is still preserved among them in the old Persian language and character; and in every oratory and fire-temple, even to this day, there is a copy of it kept (in the same manner as there is with us of the Bible in every parish church), out of which, on certain flated times, the prieffs read a portion of it to the people. b Dr Hyde, late professor of the Hebrew and Arabic tongues at Oxford, being well skilled in the old Perfic, as well as the modern, offered to have published the whole of it with a Latin translation, could be have been supported in the expences of the edition. But for want of this help and encouragement, the defign died with him, to the great damage of the learned world: for a book of that antiquity, no doubt, would be of great use, could it be made public among us, and would unfold and give us light into many things of the times where-In it was written, which we are now ignorant of.

In this book are found a great many things c taken out of the ⁴ Diodorus Sic. lib. 2. p. 118.

D Vide eundem De Religione veterum Perfarum, cap. 1. p. 25.

[°] Pocockii Specimen Hilt. Arab. p. 148. Religio véterum Perfarum.

the scriptures of the Old Testament, besides those I have already mentioned; which farther proves the author's original to have been what I have faid: for therein he inferts a great part of the pfalms of David; he makes Adam and Eve to have been the first parents of all mankind, and gives in a manner the same history of the creation and the deluge that Moses doth; only as to the former, whereas Mofes tells us, that all things were created in fix days, Zorosftres converts those fix days into fix times, allowing to each of those times several days; so that, putting them all together, the time of the creation, according to his account, amounted to 365 days, that is, a whole year. He speaks therein also of Abraham, Joseph, Moses, and Solomon, in the same manner as the scriptures do. And, our of a particular veneration for Abraham, he called his book the book of Abraham, and his religion the religion of Abraham: for he pretended, that the reformation which he introduced, was no more, than to bring back the religion of the Perfians to that original purity in which Abraham practifed it, by purging it of all those defects, abuses, and innovations, which the corruptions of after-times had introduced into it. And to all this Mahomet also (no doubt from this pattern) afterwards pretended for his religion: for the name of Abraham hath for a great many ages past been had in great veneration all over the East. and among all fects; fo that every one of them have thought it would give reputation to them, could they entitle themselves to him: for not only the Jews, the Magians, and the Mahometans, but the Sabians, and also the Indians (if the Brahama of the latter be Abraham, as it is with good reason supposed, all challenge him to themselves, as the great patriarch and founder of their feveral fests; every one of them pretending, that their religion is the fame which Abraham professed, and by his reformation established among them: and to restore this reformation was all that Zoroaffres, Mahomet, and the author of the Sabian fect, whoever he was, pretended to. This veneration for Abraham in those parts, proceeded from the great same of his piety, which was (it is supposed) there spread among them by the Ifraelites in their dispersion all over the East, first on the Assyrian, and after on the Babylonish captivity. And this same being once fixed, made all parties fond of having him thought their own; and therefore all laid claim to him. And, in this book, Zoroaftres commands also the same observances about beasts clean and unclean, as Moses doth; gives the same law of paying tithes to the facerdotal order; injoins the fame care of avoiding all external, as well as all internal pollutions; the fame way of cleanling and purifying themselves, by frequent washings; the same keeping of the priefthood always within the same tribe, and the fame ordaining of one high priest over all; and several other institutions are also therein contained of the same Jewish extraction. The rest of its contents are an historical account of the life, actions, and prophecies of its author, the feveral branches and particulars of his new reformed superstition, and rules and exhortations to moral living; in which he is very preffing, and fufficiently exact, faving only in one particular, that is, about incest: for therein he wholly takes this away, and, as if nothing of this nature were unlawful, a allows a man to marry, not only his fifter or his daughter, but also his mother; and it went so far with that fect in the practice, that, in the facerdotal tribe, he that was born of this last and worst fort of incest, was looked on as the best qualified for the facerdotal function; none being esteemed among them more proper for the highest stations in it, than those that were born of mothers who conceived them of their own fons; which was fuch an abomination, that though all things else had been right therein, this alone is enough to pollute the whole book. The Persian kings being exceedingly given to such incestuous marriages, this seems to have been contrived out of a vile piece of flattery to them, the better to engage and fix them to their fect. But b Alexander, when he conquered Perfia, did put an end to this abomination; for he did by a law forbid all fuch inceftuous copulations among them.

Zoroaftres having obtained this wonderful fuccess, in making his imposture to be thus received by the king, the great men, and the generality of the whole kingdom, c he returned back again to Balch; where, according to his own institution, he was obliged to have his refidence, as Archimagus, or head of the fect; and there he reigned in spirituals with the same authority over the whole empire, as the king did in temporals; and from hence perchance might proceed the mistake of making him king of Bactria, Balch being in that province. And his being faid to have been there flain in battle by Ninus, might also have its original from his fuffering this fate in that country, although from another hand: for, after his return to Balch, having enterprifed upon Argasp, king of the oriental Scythians (who was a zealous Sabian), to draw him over to his religion, and backed this attempt with the authority of Darius, the more prevalently to induce him to it, the Scythian prince refented it with fuch indignation to be thus imperiously addressed to concerning this matter, that he invaded Bactria with an army; and having there defeated the forces of Darius that opposed him, flew Zoroastres, with all the priefts of his patriarchal church, which amounted to the number of 80 persons, and demolished all the fire-temples in that province. This happened in the 35th year of the reign of Darius. The Persians tell us, that Lorasp, or Hystaspes, the father of Darius, was slain also in the same war. But, if he lived so long, he must then have been exceeding old; for, allowing him to have been no more than 20 on his first coming with Cyrus out of Persia, he must now have been 93 years old. But this is no Arrange thing in those parts: for the air being there throughly pure and healthy, the perspiration free and regular, and all the fruits of the earth fully concected, they who can there avoid the excesses of lust and luxury, usually live to a great age: of which we have lately had two instances, in Aurang-Zeb, king of India, and Rajah-Singah, king of Candia, in the island of Geylon, the former dying in the year 1708, of the age of near 100, and the other about twenty years before, much older.

^a Diogenes Laertius in Proæmio. Strabo, lib. 15. Philo Judzus de specialibus legibus, p. 773. Tertullian in Apologetico. Clemens Alexandrinus in Pædagog. 1. p. 81. et Strom. 3. p. 314.

b Plutarchus de Fortuna Alexandri. E Peligio vet. Perf. c. 24.

But Darius foon revenged the injury upon the Scythian king: for, falling on him before he could make his retreat, he overthrew him with a great flaughter, and drove him out of the province; after which he rebuilt again all the fire-temples that had been demolished by the enemy, and especially that at Balch; which he erected with a grandeur fuitable to its dignity, it being the patriarchal temple of the fect; and therefore, from the name of its restorer, it was thenceforth called a Azur Gustasp, i.e. the fire-temple of Darius Hystaspes. And the care which he took in this matter, shews the zeal which he had for his new religion, which he still continued to propagate after the death of its author with the same ardour as before. And, the better to preferve its credit and reputation after this accident, he thenceforth took it on himself to be their Archimagus: for Porphyry tells us, he ordered, before his death, that, among other his titles, it should be engraven on his monument, that he was Master of the Magians; which plainly implies, that he bore this office among them, (for none but the Archimagus was mafter of the whole fect). But it was not long that he was in it; for he died the next year after. However, from hence it feems to have proceeded, that the kings of Persia were ever after looked on to he of the facerdotal tribe, and were always c initiated into the facred order of the Magians, before they took on them the crown, or were inaugurated into the kingdom.

The

^{*} Religio veterum Persarum, c. 23.

b Porphyrius de Abstinentia, lib. 4. p. 165. edit. Cant.

Cicero de Divinatione, lib. 7. Philo Judicus de Specialibus Legibus.

The a Greeks had the name of Zoroastres in great esteem. fpeaking of him as the great mafter of all human and divine knowledge. B Plate, CAriffotle, d Plutarch, and Porphyry, mention him with honour, acknowledging his great learning; and fo do others. f Pliny faith much of him; and particularly remarks, that he was the only person that laughed on the day in which he was born; and that the pulfation of his head did then beat fo firong, that it heaved up the hand laid upon it; which last, he saith, was a presage of his future learning. Solinus tells us the same story of his laughing on the day of his birth; and faith, that & he was Optimarum artium peritissimus, i. e. Most skilful in the knowledge of the best arts. And Apuleius's character of him is, that he was h Omnis divini arcanz antifles, i. e. The chief doctor in all divine mysteries. Cedrenus names him as a famous aftronomer among the Perfians, and Suidas faith of him, that he excelled all others in that science. And this reputation he still hath over all the East, even among those who are most averse to his sect to this very day: for they all there, as well Mahometans as Sabians, give him k the title of Hakim, that is, of a wife and learned philosopher, and reckon him as the most skilful and eminent of their ancient aftronomers. And particularly Ulugh Beigh, that famous and learned Tartarian prince, writing a book of aftronomy and aftrology, doth therein 1 prefer Zoroaftres before all others for his skill and knowledge in these sciences. It is to be observed also, that they who write of Pythagoras, do almost all of them tell us, that he was the scholar of Zoroastres, at Babylon, and learned of him most of that knowledge which afterwards rendered him so famous in the West. So faith m Apuleius, and so say n Jamblichus, Porphyry, and P Clemens Alexandrinus; (for the Zabratus or Zaratus of Vorphyry, and the Na-Zaratus of Clemens, were none other than this Zoroastres); and they relate the mat-

² Diogenes Laertius in Proœmio.

^b In Alcibiade 1.

d De Iside et Ofiride. In vita Pythagoræ.

Cap. r.

Floridorum fecunda.

libid.

In libro de Magia citante Laertio in Prommio.

f Lib. 30. c. 1. and lib. 7. c. 16.

In vocibus Mayor & Asperoplia & Zupoaspre

E Religio Vet. Perf. c. 24. p. 312.

m Floridorum fecundo.

n In vita Pythagoræ, c. 4.

o In vita Pythagoræ, p. 185. Edit. Cant.

[🔻] Strom. 1. p. 223. ¶ Jamblichus de vita Pythagoræ, c. 4. Apuleius Floridorum fecunda:

ter thus: that when Cambyfes conquered Egypt, a he found Pythagoras there on his travels, for the improvement of himself in the learning of that country; that, having taken him prifoner, he fent him with other captives to Babylon, where Zoroastres (or Zabratus, as Porphyry calls him) then lived; and that there he became his disciple, and learned many things of him of the eaftern learning. The words of Porphyry are, That by a Zabratus he was cleanfed from the pollutions of his life past and instructed from what things virtuous persons ought to be free, and also learned from him the discourse concerning nature, and what are the principles of the universe." This story may well enough agree with the time of Zoroastres. but it cannot do fo with the time of Pythagoras; what is therein faid of his being carried captive to Babylon, it is possible might have happened when Nebuchadnezzar conquered Egypt, but could not be when it was conquered by Cambyses; b the chronology of the life of Pythagoras may very well admit of the former, but can never of the latter: for, by that time Gambyfes had conquered Egypt, Pythagoras had been fettled in Italy above 20 years, after all his travels were over, and was then grown an old man, being then about the 63d year of his age. But, however, that Pythagoras was at Babylon, and learned there a great part of that knowledge which he was afterwards fo famous for, is agreed by call, though there may be fome error, as to the time when he is faid to have been there, or the manner how he came hither. His flay there, d Jamblichus tells us, was 12 years; and that, in his converse with the Magians, he learned from them (over and above what hath been afore mentioned out of Porphyry) arithmetic, music, and the knowledge of divine things, and the facred mysteries pertaining thereto. But the most important doctrine which he brought home from thence, was that of the immortality of the foul: for it is generally agreed among the ancients, c that he was the first of all the Greeks that taught it. And this I take for certain he had from Zoroastres: for, as I have afore shewn, it was his doctrine, and he is the ancientest whom we have upon record of all the heathen nations that taught it. But Pythagoras did not bring this doctrine into Greece with that purity in which he received it from his master; for having corrupted it with a mixture of the Indian philosophy (for this also he ² In Vita Pythagoræ, p. 285. Edit. Cant.

t See the bishop of Worcester's tract of the life of Pythagoras.

Diagones Lagrence Parchyrius et Jamblichus in Vita Pythagora

Diogenes Leertius, Porphyrius et Jamblichus in Vita Pythagoræ.

d Jimblichus in Vita Pythagoræ, lib. 4.

^e Porphyrius in Vita Pythagoræ, p. 188. et. 201. Edit. Cant. Jamblie thus in Vita Pythagoræ, c. 30.

had learned in the East), he made this immortality to a consist in an eternal transmigration of the soul from one body to another; whereas Zoroastres's doctrine was, b that there is to be a resurrection of the dead, and an immortal state after to follow, in the same manner as c Daniel taught, and the people of God then held, and we now; and there is no doubt but that he had it from them.

Some of the d ancient heretics, especially the followers of Prodicus, pretended to have the fecret books of Zoroaftres containing his revelations, and other mysteries of religion, and offered to make use of them in defence of their heresies. Against these Plotinus e and Porphyry did both write, and fully shewed them to have been the forgeries of the Gnostic Christians. And others have gathered together out of Proculus, Simplicius, Damascius Synefius, Olympiodorus, and other writers, what they call the oracles of Zoroastres; and several editions have been published of them in Greek with the scholia or comments of Pletho and Psellus. But all these are mere figments coined by the Platonic philosophers, who lived after the time of Christ, and are condemned as fuch by f St Chryfostome, who plainly tells us that they were all figments. If any are defirous to fee what unintelligible and nonfenfical stuff these oracles do contain, they may confult Mr Stanley's book of the Chaldaic philosophy, which is published at the end of his history of philosophy, where they will find them translated into English from the collection of Francis Patricins.

Abul-Pharagius tells us, that ^g Zerdusht (or Zoroastres) foretold to his Magians the coming of Christ, and that, at the time of his birth, there should appear a wonderful star, which should shine by day, as well as by night; and therefore left it in command with them, that when that star should appear, they should follow the directions of it, and go to the place where he should be born, and there offer gifts, and pay their adoration unto him; and that it was by this command, that the three wise men came from the East, that is, out of Persia, to worship Christ at Bethlehem. And so far ^h Sharistani, though a Mahometan writer, doth agree with him, as that he tells us, that Zerdusht (or Zoroastres)

^a Porphyrius in Vita Pythagoræ, p. 17. Edit Cant. et Jamblichus et Diogenes Laertius in Vita ejudlem.

b Diog. Laertius in Proæmio.

c Chap. xii. 2. 3.

d Clemens Alexandrinus. Strom. 1. p. 223.

e Vide Lucam Holstenium de vita et scriptis Porphyrii, c. 9. p. 57e Edit. Cant.

f In vita Babylæ Martyris.

⁸ Historia Dynastiarum, p. 54.

h Religio vet. Perf. c. 31. p. 382. 383.

foretold the coming of a wonderful person in the latter times, who should reform the world both in religion and righteousness; and that kings and princes should become obedient to him, and give him their assistance in promoting the true religion, and all the works thereof. But what these attribute to the prophecy of Zoroastres, a others refer to the prophecy of Balaam; and say, that it was by his prediction, that the wise men were led by the star to seek Christ in Judea, and there pay their adoration unto him. But all this seems to be taken out of the Legendary writings of the Eastern Christians. And Abul-Pharagius, though an Arab writer, being by religion a Christian, it is most likely, that what he tells us of this matter was taken from them.

Those who are still remaining of this sect in Persia b have there the name of Gaurs, which in the Arabic fignifieth Infidels, and is the usual appellation which the Mahometans bestow on all that are not of their religion. But those people have this name in Perfia by way of eminency, as if there were none other such like them; and therefore they are there called by it, as if it were their national name, and are known by none other in that country, and whosoever speaks of a Gaur there, understands none other by it, than one of this fect. They have a fuburb at Hispahan, the metropolis of Persia, which is called Gaurabad, or the town of the Gaurs, where they are employed only in the meanest and vilest drudgeries of the town. And some of them are scattered abroad in other places of that country, where they are made use of in the like fervices. But the bulk of them is in Kerman, which being the barrenest and worst province of all Persia, and where others care not to dwell, the Mahometans have been content to permit them to live there with fome freedom, and the full exercife of their religion. But every where elfe they use them as dogs, esteeming them as to their religion the worst of all those that differ from them; and it is with a wonderful constancy that they bear this oppression. Some ages since, for the avoiding of it, several of them fled into India, and settled there in the country about Surat, where their pofferity are still remaining even to this day. And c a colony of them is fettled in Bombay, an island in those parts belonging to the English, where they are allowed, without any moleflation, the full freedom and exercise of their religion. They are a poor, barmless fort of people, zealous in their fuperstition, rigorous in their morals, and exact in their dealings, professing the worship of one God only, and the belief of a refurrection and a future judgement, and utterly detecting all idolatry, although reckoned by the Mahometans the most guilty of it; for although they perform their worship before fire, and towards the rising sun, yet they utterly deny that they worship either of them. They hold, that more of God is in these his creatures than in any other, and that therefore they worship God toward them, as being in their opinion the truest Sheckinah of the divine presence among us, as darkness is that of the devils; and as to Zoroastres, they still have him in the same veneration, as the Jews have Moses, looking on him as the great prophet of God, by whom he sent his law, and communicated his will unto them.

² Theodorus Tarfenfis.

b Thevenot's Travels. Sanfon's present state of Persia. Tavernier Religio vet. Pers. c. 29.

c Ovington's Travels.

Xerxes, having afcended the throne, a employed the first year of his reign in carrying on the preparations for the reduction of Egypt, which his father had begun. He b confirmed to the Jews at Jerusalem all the privileges granted them by his father, especially that of having the tribute of Samaria for the furnishing them with sacrifices for the carrying on of the divine worship in the temple of God in that place.

In the fecond year of his reign, he marched against the Egyptians, and, having throughly vanquished and subdued these revolters, he c reduced them under an heavier yoke of servitude than they were before; and then, towards the end of the year, after having made Achemenes, one of his brothers, governor of the province, returned again to Susa.

This year Herodotus, the famous historian, d was born at Halicarnassus in Caria; for he was 53 years old when the Peloponefian war first began.

Xerxes being puffed up with his fuccess against the Egyptians, upon the advice and instigation of Mardonius, the son of Gobrias, who had married one of his sisters, eresolved upon a war with Greece; and, in order thereto, made great preparations for three years together throughout all the provinces of the Persian empire.

Jeshua the high priest of the Jews at Jerusalem, f died in the 53d year of his high-priesthood, and s Jehoiakim his fon succeeded him in that office.

Xerxes, being refolved on the Grecian war, h entered into a Herodotus, lib. 7.

b Josephus Antiq. lib. rr. c. 5.

e Herodotus, lib 7.

A Aulus Gelius, lib. 15. c. 23.

[&]quot; Ilerodotus, lib. 7.

f Chronicon Alexandrinum.

g Nehemiah xii. 10. Josephus. Antiq. lib. 10. c. 5.

h Diod. Sic. lib. II.

a league with the Carthaginians: whereby it was agreed, that, while the Perfians invaded Greece, the Anno 482, Xerxes 4.

Carthaginians should fall on all those who were of the Grecian name in Sicily and Italy, that thereby they might be diverted from helping one the other. And the Carthaginians made choice of Hamilear to be their general in this war, who not only raised what forces he could in Africa, but also with the money sent him by Kerxes hired a great number of mercenaries out of Spain, Gallia, and Italy; so that he got together an army of 300,000 men, and a sleet proportionable hereto, for the prosecuting of the intent of this league.

And thus Xerxes, according as was forefold by the prophet

Daniel, a having, by his firength, and through his greatrickes, flirred up all the then known habitable world against the realm of Grecia, that is, all the Anno 481. Merxes 5.

West, under the command of Hamilear, and all the East under his own, he did, b in the 5th year of his reign, which was c the 10th after the battle of Marathon, set out from Susa to begin the war, and having marched as far as Sardis, wintered there.

Early the next fpring d Merkes did fet out for the Hellefpont; over which two bridges of boats having been laid, the one for his army, and the other for his carriages and beafts of burden, he passed all over in feven days; during all which time they were continually a paffing day and night, before all could get over; so great was the number of them that attended him in this expedition. thence marching through the Thracian Cherfonefus, he arrived at Dorifcus, a city at the mouth of the river Hebrus, in Thracia; at which place having encamped his army, and ordered his fleet also to attend him on the adjacent shore, he there took His land army, upon the muster, was an account of both. found to be 1,700,000 foot, and 80,000 horse, besides his chariots and his camels, for which, allowing 20,000 more, the whole will amount to 1,800,000 men. His fleet confitted of 1207 ships of the line of battle, besides gallies, transports, vica tuallers, and other forts of veffels that attended, which were 3000 more; on board all which were reckoned to be 517,610 men. So that the whole number of forces by fea and land, which Xerxes brought with him out of Afin to invade Greece, amounted to 2,317,610 men. After his passing the Hellespoot, the nations on this fide, that submitted to him, added to his land Vol. I.

a Daniel zi. 2.

b Herodot. lib. 7.
c Thucydides, lib. 7.

d Herodot, lib. 7. Diod. Siculus, lib. xx. Plutarchus in Themistocolet Aristide, Justin, lib. 2, 6, 20, army 300,000 men more, and 220 ships to his fleet, on board of which were 24,000 men. So that, putting all together, his forces by fea and land, by that time he came to the straits of the Thermopylæ, made up the number of 2,641,610 men. And the fervants, eunuchs, women, futlers, and all fuch other people as followed the camp, were computed to be no lefs than as many more. So that the whole number of persons of all forts, that followed Xerxes in this expedition, were at least five millions. This is a Herodotus's account of them, and b Plutarch and c Ifocrates agree with him herein. But d Diodorus Siculus, e Pliny, f Ælian, and others, do, in their computations, fall much short of this number, making the army of Xerxes. with which he passed the Hellespont against Greece, to be very little more than that with which Darius his father passed the Bosphorus to make war upon the Scythians. It is probable they might have mistaken the one for the other. The verses engraved on the monument of those Grecians, who were flain at Thermopylæ, best agree with the account of Heredotus; for in them it is faid, " that they there fought against two millions of men. And he being the ancientest author that hath written of this war, and having lived in the age in which it happened, and treated of it more particularly, and with a greater appearance of exactness than any other, his computation seemeth the most likely to be the truest; and that especially since we find it to be the general opinion of the ancients, both Greeks and Latins, that this was the greatest army that was ever brought into the field.

Indephus teils us, he that a band of Jews was also in this army, and brings for proof of it a passage out of the poet Chærilus, who, in describing the army of Xerxes, as they passed on by their several nations in their march, hath these verses.

Then next did march, in babit and in mien,
A people wonderful for to be feen:
Their language is in dialect the fame,
Which men do speak of the Phanician name.
They dwell in the high Solymaan land,
On hills, near which there doth a great lake flant.

Jerusalem,

^{*} Herodot. lib. 7. b In Themistocle.

In Panathenaico.

d Lib. II.

^{*,}Lib. 33. c. 10.

S Var. Iliaor, lib. 13. e. 2.

Fiferodot. lib.7. Diod. Siculus, lib. 11. p. 26. This infeription, according to the reading as in Herodotus, faith they were three millions, but as in Diodotus only two millions.

h Contra Apionem, lib. 1.

Jerusalem, having also had the name of a Solyma, and all the country thereabout being mountainous, and lying near the great lake Asphaltites, commonly called the lake of Sodom, this description seems plainly to suit the Jews, especially since it is also mentioned, that they spake the Phænician language, the Syriac being then the vulgar language of the Jews. But b Scaliger, Cunæus, and Bochartus, understand it of the Solymi in Pishdia. However Salmasius maintains the contrary opinion, and justifies Josephus in it; and it must be said, that it is not at all likely, that when Xerxes called all the other nations of the Persian empire to follow him to this war, the Jews alone should be excused from it. And therefore whether these, whom Chærilus speaks of, were Jews or not, it must be taken for certain, that they also did bear a part in this expedition.

After Xerxes had taken this account of his fleet and army at Dorifcus, f he marched from thence with his army through Thrace, Macedon, and Theffaly, towards Attica, and ordered his fleet to attend him on the coast all the way, making the same flations by fea that he did by land. All yielded to him in his march without any opposition, till he came to the straits of Thermopylæ; where Leonidas, king of the Lacedamonians, with 300 Spartans, and as many other Greeks as made up a body of 4000 men, defended the passagainst him. For two days he made it good against all the numerous army of the Persians, repulsing them in every affault with a great flaughter of their men. But. on the third day, being ready to be furrounded by the Persians, through the treachery of a certain Greek, who led them by a fecret way over the mountains, to fall on them in the rear, all retired, faving Leonidas and his 300 Spartans, and some few others that would not defert them; who, refolutely abiding by the post they had undertaken to defend, were at length all flain upon the Spot. But the Persians paid very dear for this victory, having loft in the gaining of it 20,000 of their men, and among them two of the brothers of Xerxes.

After this Xerxes sentered through Bootia into Attica, the country of the Athenians; having spent in his march hicher fince his passing the Hellespont four months. The Athenians; not able to defend themselves against so great a force, deferted

z their

^a By Abbreviation for Hierofolyma,

b In Notis ad Fragmenta.

De Republica Hebizorum, lib. 2. c. 18.

d Geographia Sacra, part 2. lib. 1. c. 2. 5 In Offilegio Linguæ Hellenisticæ.

f Herodot, lib. 7. Diodor, Sic. lib. 11. Plutarchus in Themistocie, B Herodot, lib. 3. Diodor, Siculus, lib. 11. Plutarchus in Aristide & their city, putting all their men aboard their fleet, and fecuring their wives and children in Salamis, Ægina, and Træzene, neighbouring cities, which, by the intervention of the fea, were out of the reach of his army; fo that, on his coming thither, he became mafter of the place without any opposition.

Themistocle.

In the interim, the Persian and Grecian a fleets lying near each other, the former at Aphetæ, and the other at Artimifium, above Eubera, had feveral encounters with each other, in every one of which the Grecians had the advantage; and though it was not great, yet it ferved them to shew, that the enemy, not withflanding their great number, were not invincible; which gave them the heart afterwards, with the greater courage and resolution, to fight against them. However, their ships being much shattered by these several encounters, they found it necessary to retire to some safer place to refit; and for this purpose came into the firaits of Salamis, where they not only refitted, but were also reinforced and augmented by a great many other ships, which, from feveral parts of Greece, came thither to them, and there joined them against the common enemy, till at length they there made up a fleet upward of 300 fail. It was while they lay there, that Xerxes entered Athens; and thereon the Persian fleet came hither also, and anchored at Phalerus, a port on that shore. The straits of Salamis, where the Greek fleet lay, was the most advantageous place for them to fight the numerous fleet of the enemy in that they could choose: for the Persians, by reason of the narrowness of that sea, not being able to extend their front in it beyond that of the Greeks, could there have no advantage from their numbers; but although their fieet was four times as great, must in that place fight upon equal terms; which Themistocles the general of the Athenians, having wifely obferved, did, by his prudence and dexterity, bring it to pass, that there it came to a battle between them; wherein the Grecians, by the advantage of the place, gained the victory, and gave the enemy fuch an overthrow, as wholly dashed all the aims and defigns of this prodigious expedition, which was one of the greateft, both for expence and number of men, that was ever undertaken; for they having destroyed 200 of their ships, besides those which they took, the reft got away to the Afian coaft; and having fet in at Cyma, a city in Æolia, they there laid up for the winter, and never came again into Greece; and Xerxes being frighted with an apprehension lest the conquerors should fail to the Hellespont, and there obstruct his return, fled thither with all the hafte and precipitation he could, and, having left Mardonius with 300,000 men to carry on the war in Greece, marched back with the rest to Sardis, and there took up his quarters for the ensuing year. It is remarkable, that, at his coming to the Hellespont, finding the bridge of boats which he had left there broken by storms, he who had passed over that sea but a sew months before with such pomp and pride, was forced to repais it in a poor fisher-boat. About the same time a his confederates, the Carthaginians. met with as great, or rather a much greater defeat, in Sicily: for Hamilcar their general, having drawn together his numerous army, of which I have already spoken, and shipped them on board the vast fleet which he had prepared for their transportation, failed with them for Sicily, and having there landed them at Panormus, a port in that island, laid siege to Himera, a maritime city in the neighbourhood. While he lay there, for his better fecurity, he caused two large camps to be fortified; in the one of which he lodged his land army, and into the other he drew up his thips, placing there all his marines for their defence. At that time Gelowas king of Sicily, a prince of great wisdom, conduct, and valour. As foon as he had an account of this invalion, he drew together an army of 50,000 foot, and 5000 horse, and marched immediately against the enemy, for the defence of the country. On his arrival at Himera, he intercepted a courier carrying letters from the Salinuntines, confederates of the Carthaginians, to Hamilcar; whereby he understood, that the next morning Hamilcar was to celebrate a great facrifice to Neptune at the camp of the marines, and that he had appointed the Salinuntine horse then to come thither to him. Gelo, taking the advantage of this intelligence, the next morning, at the time appointed, fent thither a party of horse of his own, who being received into the camp for the Salinuntines, first slew Hamiltan, and then set the fleet on fire. As soon as this was done, Gelo having notice of it by a fignal given him from the top of an adjacent hill, where he had placed watchmen for this purpose, drew out his army before the other camp of the enemy, and gave them battle. But the flame afcending from the camp of the marines, foon telling the Carthaginians the tate of their fleet, and a meffenger at the same time bringing them an account of the death of their general, this fo disheartened and confounded them, that, having no longer any courage to stand their ground, they were foon put to the rout, and Gelo flew of them 150,000 on the field of battle, and took all the rest prisoners, which were as many more, and fold them all for flaves; fo that all Sicily was filled with them. This defeat was so entire, that of all this prodigious fleet and army the greatest that was ever set forth in those western parts

^a Herodot, lib. 8. Plutarchus in Themistocle. Diod. Siculus, lib. 11.

a Herodotus, lib. 7. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 11.

parts for any expedition, it is remarked none returned, fave only a few, who escaped in a cock-boat, to bring this dismal news to Carthage. A Herodotus tells us, that this battle was fought on the same day with that of Salamis; but Diodorus Siculus says it was at the time when Leonidas was slain at Thermopylæ; which seems to be the truer account of the two: for, after this success of Gelo, the Grecians sent to him for his adistance against Xerxes, which they would not have done afer the battle of Salamis. For from thenceforth they thought themselves alone more than sufficient for the enemy, without needing any other force than that of their own to finish the war.

On Xerxes's departure out of Greece, d Mardonius wintered his army in Theffaly and Macedonia, and early the Anno 479. next fpring marched with it into Beotia. From hence he fent Alexander, king of Macedonia, to Athens, with proposals of accommodation from the king. Thereby he offered them to rebuild, at the king's charges, whatfoever had been burnt or demolified in Attica the former year, to permit them to live according to their own laws, to reinstate them in all their former possessions, and to add to them whatfoever other lands they should defire. But the Athenians, not being to be induced to defert the interest of Greece for any advantage whatfoever, would hearken to none of thefe offers: whereon e Mardonius, being enraged by the refufal, marched with all his army into Attica, destroying every thing wherever he came, and, entering Athens, burnt and demolified whatfoever he there found flanding after the former year's devastation: for the Athenians, not being strong enough to refift fuch a torrent, had the fecond time withdrawn to Salamis, Ægina, and Træzene, and left the city empty. In the interim, the joint forces of all Greece being drawn together at the isthmus of Corinth, Mardonius thought fit to march back again into Beeotia: for that being an open and level country, was much fitter for him to fight in than Attica, which being rough and craggy, and full of hills and defiles, could fearce any where afford him room enough for to draw up his numerous army in, or a ground proper for his cavalry to do any fervice in. On his return, he encamped on the river Æfopus: thither the Greeks marched after him, under the command of Paufanias, king of Lacedamon, and Arithides, general of the Athenians. They confifted of 120,000 men, and the Persians of 350,000, faith f Herodotus, of 500,000, faith 5 Diodorus Siculus:

Lib. 7. b Lib. 11. C Herodot. lib. 7.

⁶ Herodot, lib. 8. Diodor, Sic. lib. 11. Plutarchus in Aristide & Themistode. Justin, lib. 2. c. 14.

Ellerodot, bb. 9. f Lib. 9. Elb. 31.

Siculus: and with these forces, near the city of Platea, it came to a decifive battle between them, in which Mardonius was slain, and all the Persian army cut in pieces. Only Artabazus, who was aware of the event, from the ill conduct which he had observed in Mardonius, made an early escape with 40,000 men, which he commanded, and, by his speed, outmarching the same of the defeat, got safe to Byzantium, and there passed over into Asia. Besides these, not 4000 of all the rest escaped the carnage of that day, but were all sain and cut in pieces by the Greeks; and this quite delivered them from all farther invasions of that people; for from that time a Persian army was never more seen on this side the Hellespont.

On the same day that the Greeks fought this battle at Platzea, a their naval forces got as memorable a victory over the remainder of the Persian fleet in Asia: for at the same time that their land forces rendezvoused at the illumus of Corinth, their fleet having met together at Ægina, under the command of Leotychides, the other king of the Lacedæmoniaus, and Xantippus, the Athenian, there came thither to them amoaliadors from the Ionians, to invite them into Afia, to deliver the Greek cities there from the flavery of the Barbarians: whereon they failed for Delos in their way thither; and, while they lay there, other ambaffadors came to them from Samos, who having acquainted them, that the Persian sleet which wintered at Cyma, having failed thence, were then at Samos, and might there be eafily vanguisted and destroyed by them, earnestly solicited them to come thither and fall upon them; whereon they accordingly fet fail forthwith for Samos. But the Perlians, hearing of their approach, retired to Mycale, a promontory on the continent of Asia, where their land army lay, consisting of 100,000 men, which were the remainder of those which Kerxes had brought back out of Greece the former year; and there drew up their thips upon the land, and fortified them with a firing rampart drawn round them. But the Greeks following them thither, by the affillance of the Ionians, who revolted to them, vanquished their army at land, took their rampart, and buint all their thips. And here ended all the great defigns of Xeixes in a most miserable difappointment, there being, after these two battles, scarce any of all that prodigious army, with which, the year before, he marched to proudly over the Heilef, out, now left, whom either the famine, the peftilence, or the fword, had not abiolutely deftroyed, excepting those whom Artabazus brought back out of Greece; and of these a great number died, on their return into Afia, by their over-glutting themselves with the plenty of that country, after the hardships they had suffered on the other fide of of the Hellefpont. A greater fleet and army was fcarce ever fet forth in the West for any expedition, than that of Hamilcar's against Sicily, or ever was there a greater army brought together any where, than that wherewith Xerxes invaded Greece; yet all these numerous forces were bassled, deseated, and destroyed, by those who, in number or power, reckoning all the armies on both sides against each other, could scarce bear the name of an handful of men in comparison of them: and hereby a signal instance was given, that, whatsoever the pride of man may design, or the power of man think to effect, it is still the providence of God that governs the world, and turneth all the affairs thereof which way soever ne pleaseth.

² Herodot, lib. 9. Dieder, Sie, lib. 11.

The battle of Platma was fought in the morning, and that of Mycale in the afternoon of the same day; and yet ait is commonly faid by the Greek writers, that they had an account of the victory of Platza at Mycale before they begun the battle there, though the whole Ægean fea, which was feveral days failing, lay between. But Diodorus Siculus clears this matter: for b he tells us, that Leotychides, finding the forces that followed him to be in great pain for the Greeks at Platæa, left they should be overpowered and vanquished by the numerous army of Mardonius, the better to encourage and enhearten his men for the battle, just before he made the first onset, caused it to be given out throughout all the army, that the Perfians were defeated, though he then knew nothing of the matter. But what he then feigned happening to be true, and also done the same day, this gave occasion for what is said of that quick intelligence, which was utterly impossible to have come in fo short a time from so far distant a place by any human means; and there is no reason to suppose a miracle in this case. And that which is faid of the victory of Paulus Æmilius over the Macedonians being known at Rome on the same day on which it was got, at a greater distance than Platea was from Mycale, no doubt, was from the fame cause. That happened to be true which was only feigned when first reported; and afterwards, when it was found to be true, and done on the fame day on which the Romans first had the report, it was made a miracle of, is if there had been fome supernatural power that brought the intelligence.

Xerxes, on his having received these two great deseats at Platæa and Mycale, deft Sardis almost with the same precipitation as he did Athens after the battle of Salamis, making all the Diodor. Sic. lib. 11. Herodot. lib. 9. Justin. lib. 2. c. 14.

p Fip. II.

e Piutarchus in Paulo Æmilio. Livius, lib. 41.

[·] Heredot. lib. 9. Diodor. Sic. lib. z z.

haste he could towards Persia, that thereby he might get as far as he could out of the reach of the conquering enemies. However, he omitted not, before he left those parts, to give a order for the burning and demolishing of all the temples in the Grecian cities in Afia; which was accordingly executed upon all of them, excepting only that of Diana at Ephefus, which alone escaped this general devastation. And this he did, not out of any particular displeasure to the Asiatic Greeks; for he did the fame wherever elfe he came, destroying all idolatrous temples that came in his way, throughout this whole expedition. The true cause of this was his zeal for the Magian religion, in which he had been throughly instructed, and made a zealous profelyte to it by Zoroastres: for that sect expressing a b great detestation against worshipping of God by images, were for destroying all idolatrous temples wherever they came. And, to keep Xerxes firm to their party, not only feveral of the chief doctors of the Magians, but also c Ostanes himself, who d was then the Archimagus, or great patriarch of the whole fect, accompanied him as his chaplains through this whole expedition: and by their instigation, e Tully tells us, it was, that all these temples were destroyed. This Ostanes is faid to have been f grandfather to Zoroastres; but it is most likely that he was his grandfon, and that it was by mistake that it hath been faid otherwife; for Zoroastres, it is certain, was g a very old man at his death. The name of Oftanes was very famous among the Greeks; for h from him, they fay, they first had the Magian philosophy; he having communicated it unto them, while he followed Xerxes in this war; and therefore from him they fometimes call the whole fect i Ostaneans, instead of Magians, as if he had been the chief founder of it.

One of the temples, which by Xerxes's order were thus deftroyed, was k that of Apollo Didumæan, near Miletus, from whence he took an immense treasure. This was discovered to the Persians by the Branchidæ, a family of the Milesians, that had the keeping of the temple; who thereon finding themselves, by reason of this treachery and sacrilege, to be become very odious to their countrymen, durst not, on Xerxes's going away, ² Strabo, lib. 14. p. 634. Cicero de Legibus, lib. 2. Hieronymus in Efaiæ, c. 37. Æfchylus in Perfis. Herodot. lib. 8.

b Clemens Alexand, in protreptico, Laertius in procemio. Pocockii Specimen Hist. Arab. p. 148, 149, f Plin, lib. 30, c. 1, 2, d Laertius in proæmio. Suidas in voce Μάγοι.

e De Legibus, lib. 2.

f Religio vet. Perf. c. 24.
g Ibid.

h Plin. lib. 30. c. t. 2. I Suidas in 'Osavar.

k Strabo, lib. 14.

flay behind, for fear of their wrath, but followed after him into Persia, and were there planted by him in a small territory, which he gave them, on the river Oxus, in the province of Bactria, where Alexander, on his making himself master of that country, finding their posterity still remaining, a caused them all to be put to the fword, thereby cruelly and unreasonably revenging, on the innocent descendants, the crime committed by their ancestors many ages before.

Xerxes, on his return towards Sufa, paffing through Baby-Ion, b made there the fame devastation of their temples, as he had in Greece, and the Leffer Afia, and, as it may be supposed. on the same principle, that is, his zeal for the Magian religion, and his avertion to that of the Sabians, who worshipped God by images, of which the Magians had the utmost detestation: for the Babylonians were all Sabians, and indeed were the first founders of the fest; for they first brought in the worship of the planets, and afterwards that of images, and from thence propagated it to all the other nations where it obtained; as hath been already shewn. And for this reason, the Magians, having them in abhorrence, above all other Sabians, prevailed with Xerxes, out of an especial hatred to them, to take Babylon in his way to Sufa, of purpose to destroy all the temples they had there; although perchance to recruit himfelf with the spoils of these temples, after the vast expences which he had been at in his Grecian war, might be the most forcible motive that wrought him into this refolution; for the wealth of their temples was vast and excessive, as having been the collection of a great number of ages. I have already computed how mamy millions of our money the treasures of the temple of Belus only amounted to, according to the account given us of them by Diodorus Siculus; and if those which he found in the other idol tem les in that city were as great, as no doubt they were, they all more than repay him all that he spent in the Grecian war. And without some such recruit, it is scarce posfible to imagine, how he could have supported himself at home, after so great a miscarriage and loss. And yet we find, that, after his return, he was supported through all his empire, in the fame manner as before, without fuffering any great damage either in his authority or power therein, after this so great and fo extraordinary a difaster; whereas it usually happens, that princes are ruined at home, as well as abroad, by fuch miffortunes.

Бу

Strabo, lib. 11. p. 518. Q. Curtius, lib. 7. c. 5.
 Arrianus Expeditionis Alexandri, lib. 7. Strabo, lib. 16. Herodotus; lib. 1. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 2.

Lecockii Specimen Hittoriz Arabicz, p. 148. 149.

By the pillaging and destroying of all these heathen temples at Babylon, was fully completed what the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah propheside hereof many years before. "All the graven images of her gods hath he broken unto the ground." "I will punish Bel in Babylon. I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed." "And I will do judgement upon all the graven images of Babylon." "Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces." For when Xerxes destroyed all these temples in Babylon, he took from them all their treatures, which they had been for many ages a-swallowing; and pulling down all the images that were in them, broke them all to pieces, and converted the gold and silver, of which they were made, to all those common uses for which he had occasion of them

After the battle of Mycale, e the Grecian fleet failed to the Hellespont, to feize the bridges which Xerxes had laid over those straits, supposing that they had been still whole. But, on their coming thither, finding that they had been broken by florms, Leotychides, with the Peloponnefians, failed home; but Xantippus, with the Athenians and allies of Ionia, still traying there, made themselves masters of Sestus, and the Thracian, Cherfonefus; where they took much spoil, and a great number of prisoners, and then, on the approach of winter, returned to their respective cities. Xantippus finding all the materials of Xerxes's bridge at Cardia, where the Perfians had caused them to be brought before his arrival in those parts, he carried them with him to Athens, and there laid them up to be a memorial of that total overthrow which they gave their enemy in this war, by the many victories which they had obtained over them. From this time all the Ionian cities in Afia revolted from the Perfians, and, entering into a confederacy with the Grecians, by their help, maintained their liberty for the most part ever after, during the continuance of that empire.

The Greeks, having fettled their affairs at home, after the great ruffle that was made in them by the late invafion of the Perfians, f refolved farther to profecute the war against them, for the driving of them out of all the cities abroad that were of the Grecian original. For which purpose, they equipped a strong sleet, of which Pausanias.

² Ifaiah xxi. 9.

b Jer. li. 44. E Jer. li. 47. 52.

A Ter. L 2.

F Herodot, lib. 9.
F Diodorus Siculus, lib. 11. Plus tarchus in Aristide

nias, king of the Lacedemoniaus, and Ariffides, the Athenian, having the command, they failed with it to Cyprus; and there having freed a great many Grecian cities from their Perlian garrifons, restored them again to their own liberty.

About this time, Xerxes at Susa a was acting a very cruel and barbarous tragedy in the house of Massites his brother. which had its rife from an incestuous love first begun at Sardis: for Xerxes, after his return thither from his flight out of Greece. fell in love with Massiftes's wife, who was then in that city; but the being a very virtuous woman, and very loving and faithful to her husband, could on no folicitations be prevailed with to defile his bed. But Xerxes, thinking to win her, at last heaped all manner of favours and obligations upon her, to engage her to yield to him; and particularly he married a daughter which she had, named Artaynta, to Darius his eldest fon, whom he intended for his successor in the throne, and, on his return to Suia, caused the marriage to be consummated: which being the greatest favour he could bestow upon the mother, he expected it would engage her to a compliance with his defires. But finding the lady's virtue to be still impregnable against all his attempts, he at length turned the amour from the mother to the daughter, and fell in love with Artaynta; where he foon found a ready compliance to all he defired. While this was a-doing, Hamestris, Xerxes's queen, having wrought a very rich and curious mantle, presented it to the king; who being very much pleased with it, wore it when he made his next visit to his mistress, and, on his having enjoyed his lust on her, to express the fatisfaction he had therein, he bade her ask what she would of him for her reward, promiting her with an oath, that whatfoever it should be, he would give it unto her. Hereon she asked of him the mantle which he had then on him. Xerxes, being aware of the mischief which might follow from his giving of it unto her, did all that he could to divert her from this request, offering her whatever elfe was in his power to redeem it from her. But nothing else being able to content the lady, and his promise, and the oath being urged for the grant, he was forced to give it unto her, and she, out of the vanity and pride of her mind, as foon as she had it, put it on, and, as by way of trophy, wore it publicly; whereby Hamestris being throughly consirmed in what she was afore only jealous of, became enraged to the utmost degree; but instead of turning her wrath against the daughter, who only was faulty in this matter, refolved to be revenged on the mother, as if all this intrigue had been of her contrivance, who was wholly innocent of it. And therefore waiting the

the great festival that used annually to be celebrated on the king's birth-day, which was then approaching, whereon it was the custom for the king to grant her whatsoever she should then defire, the asked of him the wife of Massistes to be given unto her. The king perceiving the malice of the woman, and what she intended, abhorred it to the utmost, both for the sake of his brother, and also for what he knew of the innocency of the lady, as to that for which Hamestris was exasperated against her; and therefore at first withstood her in this request all that he could. But her importunity not being to be diverted, nor what was faid for the custom to be gainfayed, he was forced to yield to her. Whereon the lady being feized by the king's guards. and delivered to her, she caused her breasts, her tongue, nose, ears, and lips, to be cut off, and thrown to the dogs before her face, and then fent her home again thus mangled to her hufband's house. In the interim, Xerxes, to mollify the matter as much as he could, sent for Massistes, and told him, that it was his defire that he must part with his wife, and that, inflead of her, he would give him one of his daughters in marriage. But Massistes, having an entire affection for his wife, could not be induced to confent hereto: whereon Xerxes told him, in an angry manner, that, fince he refused to accept of his daughter, when offered to him, he should neither have her nor his wife either; and so dismissed him in displeasure. Whereon Mafistes, suspecting some mischief was done him, made haste home to fee how matters there stood; where finding his wife in that mangled condition as hath been mentioned, and being thereby exasperated to the utmost, as the case deserved, he immediately got together all his family, fervants, and dependents, and made all the haste he could towards Bactria, the province of which he was governor; purposing, as soon as he should arrive thither, to raife an army, and make war upon the king, to be revenged of him for this barbarous usage. But Xerxes, hearing of his fudden retreat, and fuspecting from thence what he intended, fent a party of horse after him, who, overtaking him on the road, cut him off, with his wife and children, and all that belonged to him. This Massistes was brother of Xerxes by Atoffa the same mother, as well as by the same father, and was a person of great worth and honour, as well as of great fidelity to the king; and he had done him great fervices in his Grecian war, having been one of his chief generals, who had the leading of his army in that expedition; and he was perfonally engaged for him in the battle of Mycale, and was in truth the chief honour of his house, and never gave him any just cause to be offended with him. However, all this could not protect him from Xerxes's cruelty; which fufficiently shews, that, where there is a vicious prince, with an arbitrary power in the government, there is nothing that can be sufficient.

cient to secure any man's safety under him.

And there is a another fact related of Hamestris, equally cruel and impious; that is, that she caused sources boys of the best families in Persia to be buried alive, as a facrifice to the infernal gods. And, in the relating of this, as well as her other cruelties above mentioned, I have been the more particular, because before a having been of opinion, by reason of the similitude that is between the names of Hamestris and Esther, that Xernes was the Ahasuerus, and Hamestris the Esther, mentioned in scripture, it may from hence appear, how impossible it is, that a woman of so vile and abominable a character, as Hamestris was, could have ever been that queen of Persia, who, by the name of Esther, is so renowed in holy writ, and is there recorded as the instrument by whom God was pleased, in so signal a manner, to deliver his people from that utter destruction which was designed against them.

After the death of Maintes, Xerxes appointed c Hystaspes, his second son, to be governor of Bactria in his stead; which obliging him to be absent from court, gave Artaxerxes, his younger brother, the opportunity of mounting the throne before him, on the death of Xerxes, as will be hereafter related.

The Grecian fleet, having effected at Cyprus what they went thither for, a failed from thence to the Hellefpont, Anno 476. and took in Byzantium; where several Persians of Xerxes 10. eminent note, and some of them of the kindred of Xerxes, being taken prisoners, Paulanias treacherously released them all, pretending they had made their escape, and by some of them entered into a treaty with Xerxes to betray Greece unto him, upon condition that he would give him one of his daughters in marriage; which being readily agreed to by Xerxes, Paufanias thenceforth took upon him to live after another rate than formerly, affecting the pomp and grandeur of the Perfians, and carrying himself haughtily and tyrannically towards the allies: whereon, they being difgusted with his conduct, and not being able any longer to bear it, did put themselves under the Athenians, who thenceforth, by this means, obtained the chief command at fea in all the Grecian affairs, and held it for many years after. The Lacedemonians, having received an account of thefe miscarriages of Pausanias, deposed him from his command on the

^a Herodot. lib. 7.

b Scaliger and his followers.

Diodor, Sic. lib. 11.

^{*} Thucydides, lib. 1. Diod. Sic. lib. 11. Platerchus in Aristide.

the Hellespont, and recalling him home, put him under public cenfure for them.

However, a the next year he went again to the Hellespont; although without the confent of the ftate, or any Anno 475. commission from them, failing thither in a private Xerxes 11. thip; which he hired on pretence of fighting against the Persians as a volunteer in that war, but in reality to carry on his treasonable defigns with them, Artabazus being appointed governor on the Propontis of purpose to be there at hand to treat with him. But while he was at Byzantium, his behaviour was fuch, that the Athenians drove him thence; whereon he went to the country of Troas, and there tarried some time the better to carry on his correspondence with Artabazus; of which there being fome fuspicions, the Lacedæmonians summoned him home by a public officer, and, on his return, put him in prison; but no evidence appearing of this thing in his trial, he was again discharged. But some time after the whole of it being brought to light, and discovered by one whom he had made use of to carry on the correspondence, they put him to death for it.

Themistocles, b by his wisdom and great application, having much advanced the power and interest of the Athenians, hereby drew on him the bitter enmity of the Lacedæmonians: for they, feeing their honour eclipfed, and that authority, whereby they had hitherto borne the chief fway among the Greeks, now rivalled and diminished by the growing up of this flourishing state, could not with patience bear it; and therefore, to gratify their revenge, refolved on the ruin of him that had been the author of it. In order whereto, they caused him first to be accused at Athens of being a confederate with Paufanias in his treason against Greece; but nothing being proved of what was laid to his charge, he was there acquitted.

But c the next year after, Themistocles being banished Athens, they renewed their defign against him. He was not Anno 471banished for any crime, but by oftracism: which was Xerxes 15. a way among them, whereby, for the better fecuring of their liberty, they used to suppress those that were grown to too great a power and authority among them, by banishing them the city for a certain term of years. Themistocles being thus necessitated for a time to leave his country, settled 6 Herodotus, lib. 7. &c. Thucydides, lib. 1. Plutarchus in Themistocle.

Diodor. Sic. lib. 11.

· Plutarchus in Ariflide.

² Thucydides, lib. r. Plutarchus in Aristide & Themistocle. Cornelius Nepos in Paufania.

Thueydides, lib. r. Plutarchus in Themistocle. Diod Siz lib. xx:

at Argos; of which the Lacedemonians taking the advantage, profecuted anew their charge against him before the general council of all Greece, then met at Sparta, and fummoned him to appear before them to answer to it, accusing him there of treafon against the whole community of Greece. Themistocles seeing how bitterly the Lacedemonians were fet against him, and knowing that they could carry every thing as they pleafed in that affembly, durst not trust his cause with them, but fled first to Corcyra, and from thence to Admetus king of the Molossians, by whose assistance being conveyed to the coasts of the Ægean fea, he took shipping at Pydna in Macedonia, and from thence passed over to Cyma, a city of Æolia in the Lesser Asia. But Xerxes having put a price of 200 talents upon his head, (which amounted to 37,500 pounds of our money), feveral were there upon the hunt after him for the gain of so great a reward. For the avoiding of this danger, he was forced there to lie hid for fome time; till at length, by the contrivance and assistance of his friend and host Nicogenes, the richest man of that country, he was conveyed fafe to Susa, in one of those close chariots, in which the Perfians used to carry their women; they that had the conducting of him giving out, that they were carrying a young Greek lady to the court for one of the nobility; by which means he got to the Persian court without any danger: where being arrived, he addressed himself to Artabanus, the captain of the guards, to whose office it belonged to bring those to the audience of the king that had any bufiness with him: by him he was introduced into Xerxes's prefence; and being there asked who he was? He told him he was Themistocles the Athenian; that, though he had done him great hurt in his wars, yet he had in many things much ferved him, particularly in hindering the Greeks from pursuing him after the battle of Salamis, and obstructing his retreat over the Hellespont; that, for these his services to him being driven out of his country, he was now fled to him for refuge, hoping that he would have more regard to what he had done for his interest, than to what with the rest of his countrymen he had in the wars afted against it. Xerxes then faid nothing to him; though, as foon as he was withdrawn, he expressed a great deal of joy and satisfaction, that so considerable a person was come over to him, wishing that God would always put it into the minds of his enemies thus to drive their best men from them. But the next morning having affembled the chief of the Perfian nobility about him, and ordered him again to be brought into his prefence, he received him with great kindness; telling him in the first place, that he owed him 200 talents: for he having fet that price upon his head, it was due to him who had brought him his head, by thus rendering himfelf unto him; and accordingly commanded it to be paid him: and then ordered him to fay what he had concerning the affairs of Greece to impart unto him. But Themistocles being then no otherwise able to deliver himself, than by an interpreter, begged leave, that he might be permitted first to learn the Persian language; hoping that then he might be in a capacity to communicate to the king what he had to impart to him in a much more perfect manner, than he could then promife to do by the interpretation of another: which being granted to him, and, having after a year's time made himfelf thorough mafter of that tongue, he was again called into the king; to whom having communicated all that he thought proper, he grew very much into his favour, so that when Mandana his fifter, who had lost feveral of her fons in the battle of Salamis, had profecuted an accufation against Themistocles for their death, and was very importunate and clamorous to have him delivered up to her a facrifice to her revenge, he not only caused him to be acquitted by the fuffrages of all the nobility then attending the court, but conferred many royal bounties upon him; for he gave him a wife of a noble Perfian family, with an house, servants, and an equipage in all things fuitable hereto, and an annual revenue fufficient to enable him in the best manner to support the same, and, on all occasions; much caressed him as long as he continued in his court. And it is mentioned as one particular instance of his favour to him, that, by his especial command, he was a admitted to hear the lectures and discourses of the Magians, and was instructed by them in all the secrets of their philosophy. But at length, it being thought best for the king's interest, that he should reside in some of the maritime towns near Greece, that he might be there ready at hand for fuch fervices as the king might have occasion of from him in those parts, he was fent to live at Magnefia, on the river Meander; where he had not only all there venues of that city (which were 50 talents a-year), but also those of Myus and Lampsacus allowed him for his maintenance, amounting altogether to 150 talents a-year, which was little less than 30,000 pounds of our money. And here he lived all the time of Xerxes, and several years after, in the reign of Artanernes his fon, in a very plentiful and splendid manner, as well he might on fo large a revenue, till at length he ended his days in that city in the manner as shall be hereafter related.

But, according to b Thucydides, Xerxes was dead, and Artanerites had newly fucceeded in the throne, when Themistocles field out of Greece to the Persian court; and therefore be Vel. I.

[?] Elutarchus in Themistocle.

tells us that it was Artaxernes Longimanus, and not Xerxes, by whom Themistocles was received with so much favour; and Thucvdides being an historian of great credit, and having wrote this not many years after the death of Artaxerxes, a the Lord Primate Usher, moved by so great an authority, follows him in this matter, and, to make it accord with the other transactions of those times, takes nine years from the reign of Xerxes, and adds them b to the two following reigns, making Xerxes to end his reign nine years fooner, and Artaxerxes to begin his reign nine years fooner, than any other author fays. Hereby the learned primate doth'exceedingly help his hypothefis of the computation of the 70 weeks of Daniel's prophecy; and that, no doubt, induced him to prefer the authority of Thucydides before all others in this particular. For if we put the 20th year of Artaxerxes Longimanus (from whence he reckons the beginning of these 70 weeks, nine years higher than others do. the middle of the last week will fall exactly in with the time when Christ was crucified. And therefore, were the authority of Thucydides sufficient to justify him in this matter, the primate's computation would appear much more plaufible than now it doth. But c the canon of Ptolemy, Diodorus Siculus, Plutarch, Africanus, Eusebins, and all others that write of these times, being against him herein, it is much more probable, that Thucydides was out in this particular; for although he be a very exact historian in the affairs of Greece, of which he professedly writes, vet it is possible he might be mistaken in those of Perfia, which he treats of only by the by.

In the interior, the Athenians, having fet out a fleet under the command of Cimon, ^d the fon of Miltiades, conquered Eione, on the river Strymon, and other parts of Thrace, and then took in the islands of Scyrus and Naxus, which had revolted from them; and, ^c while they were affaulting the last of these, Themistocles passed by them, in his slight into Asia, and disfi-cultly escaped falling into their hands.

The next year after, ' Cimon, failing from Athens with a fleet

[°] In Annalibus Veteris Terlamenti fub anno Julianæ Periodi, 4241.

b. L. a. To the reigns of Artuserses and his fon Nerses, whom the primate makes to reign one year after him.

For these authors say, that Kernes reigned 21 years, and Artaxernes 41. But according to the primate, Kernes reigned but 12 years, and Arabaness 50.

d Diodorus Siculus, lib. 11. Plutarchus in Cimone.

e Plutarchus in Themistocle.

f Dioderus et Pluterchus, ibid. Thucydides, lib. 1.

fleet of 200 fail, passed over to the coasts of Asia; where, having augmented it with 100 fail more from the allies, he took in all the maritime parts of Caria and Lycia, driving the Persians out of all the cities they were possessed of in those parts; and then hearing that they had a great fleet on the coasis of Pamphylia, and were also drawing down thither as great an army by land for some expedition, he hastened thither with 250 of his best ships in quest of them; and finding their fleet, confifting of 350 fail, at anchor in the mouth of the river Eurymedon, and their land army encamped on the shore by, he first assaulted their seet; which being foon put to the rout, and having no other way to fly but up the river, were all taken, every thip of them, and 20,000 men in them, the rest having either escaped to land, or been flain in the fight. After this, while his forces were thus flushed with success, he put them assore, and fell on the land army, and overthrew them also with a great flaughter, whereby he got two great victories in the same day, of which one was equal to that of Salamis, and the other to that of Platza. And having gotten information, that there were eighty more Phænician thips coming to join the Perfian fleet, he furprifed them in the harbour, before they had any notice of the late defeat, and destroyed every ship of them; and all the men ou board were either drowned or flain in the fight. After which fuccefs, Cimon returned home in great triumph, and very much enriched and adorned Athens with the spoils got in this expedition.

Anno 470. Xerxes 16.

The next year a Cimon failed to the Hellespont; and, falling on the Persians, who had taken possession of the Thracian Chersonesus, drove them out thence, and subjected their country again to the Athenians; though in truth (it having been the b principality of his father Miltiades) he had the best right to it himself. After this he subdued the Thasians, who had revolted from the Athenians, and then, landing his army on the opposite shore of Thrace, he seized all the gold mines on those coasts, and brought under him all that country as far as Macedon, and thereby opened a way for the conquering of that realm also, would be have pursued the opportunity: for c the emitting of which, he was asterwards, on his return, brought to trial for his life before the Athenians, a if he had been corrupted by the Macedonians to spare them, and hardly escaped being condemned for it.

Xernes, being at laif daunted and wholly diffeouraged by the continued feries of formany loftes and defeats, gave over all R 2 thoughts

^a Plutarchus in Cimone.

b Herodotus, lib. 6.
c Plutarchus in Cinione.

thoughts of any longer carrying on the Grecian war; and therefore, from this time, a no more of his ships were seen in the Ægean sea, or any of his forces on the coasts associating to it, all the remainder of his reign.

After this, Xerxes giving himfelf wholly up to luxury and eafe, minded nothing but the gratifying of his plea-Anno 456. fures and his lufts; whereby growing into contempt with the people, b Artabanus, the captain of his guards, and one who had been long in prime favour and authority with him, conspired against him, and having drawn Mithridates, one of his eunuchs that was his chamberlain, into the plot, by his means got into his bed-chamber, and there flew him, while he flept in his bed; and then, going to Artaxerxes, his third fon, acquainted him of the murder, and accused Darius his elder brother to be the author of it, telling him, that it was done to make his way to the throne; that it was his defign to cut him off next to secure himself in it; and that therefore it behoved him to look to himfelf. All which Artaxerxes, as being then a very young man, rashly believing, without any farther examination, to be true, and being irritated thereby in fuch a manner as Artabanus intended, went immediately to his brother's apartment, and there, by the affiftance of Artabanus and his guards, flew him alfo. And this he did, as he thought, by way of just revenge for the death of his father, and for the fecuring of his own fafety, being imposed on and deceived by the craft of the traitor, who excited him hereto. The next heir was Hystaspes the second of Xerxes; but he being absent in Bactria, of which province he was governor, Artabanus took Artaxerxes, as being next at hand, and put him on the throne; but with defign to let him fit on it no longer than till he had formed a party firong enough to feize it for himfelf. He having been long in great authority, had made many creatures, and he had alfo feven fons all grown up to be men of robust bodies, and advanced to great dignities in the empire; and his confidence in these was that which put his ambition on this defign: but while he was hastening it to a conclusion, Artaxerxes, having got a full discovery of the whole plot, by the means of Megabyzus, who had married one of his fifters, was before hand with him in a counterplot, and cut him off before his treason was fully ripened for execution; whereby having fecured himfelf in thorough poffethon of the kingdom, he held it 4x years.

He is faid to have been the handlomest person of the age

¹¹³

^{*} Plutarchus in Cimone.

v Ctefias. Diodorus Siculus, IIb. 21. Justin. IIb. 3. 2. 2.

Sarabo, lib. 15. p. 125.

in which he lived, and to have been a prince a of a very mild and generous disposition; he is called by the Greek historians Mangogrig, or Longimanus (i.e. the long-handed) by reason of the more than ordinary length of his hands; for they were so long, that, on his standing upright, he could touch his knees with them. But in scripture he hath the name of Ahasuerus, as well as that of Artaxerxes, and was the same who had Esther for his queen. I acknowledge there are two very great men, whose opinion differ from me herein, Archbishop Usher, and Joseph Scaliger. The former c holdeth that it was Darius Hyflaspes that was the king Ahasuerus who married Esther; and that Atossa was the Vashti, and Artystona the Esther of the holy scriptures. But all that is faid of those persons by the historians who have written of them is wholly inconfiftent herewith: for Herodotus pofitively tells us, that Artystona d was the daughter of Cyrus, and therefore she could not be Esther; and that e Atosia had four fons by Darius, belides daughters, all born to him by her after he was king; and therefore she could not be that queen Vaihti, who was divorced from the king her huiband f in the third year of his reign, nor he that Ahasuerus that divorced her. Furthermore, Atossa is said to have had that predominant interest with Darius even to the time of his death, that it was by her means that, in the last act of his life, " he was influenced to settle the fuccession of his crown on Xerxes her son, to the disinheriting of all his elder fons, who were born to him by a former wife; whereas the Ahasuerus of the book of Esther had removed Vashti both from his bed and from his presence by h an unalterable decree: and therefore never could admit her again to either all his life after. That which chiefly induced the learned archbishop to be of this opinion was, that whereas it is faid of Ahafuerus i in the book of Esther, that he laid a tribute upon the land, and upon the isles, k the same is also said of Davius Hystaspes by Herodotus; and therefore he thought, that they were both the same person. But Strabo, who is an author of as good, if not better credit, attributeth this to 1 Longimanus. It must be acknowledged, that in the printed copies which we now have of that author, it is read Darius Longimanus in the place which I refer to. But the title Longimanus, and the description of the person afb Plutarch. et Strabo, ib. In Annalibus Veteris Testamenti, sub anno J. P. 4193....

^a Plutarch. in Artaxerxe Mnemone.

d Herodot, lib. 3. et lib. 7. Herodot, lib. 7. fub initio.

f Fsther i. 3.

S Herodot. lib. 7.

h Efther i. 19.

i Chap. x. 1.

k Herodot, lib. 3. 1 Strabo, lib. 13. p. 735.

ter in that place added, can belong to none but to the Artaxerxes whom we now speak of; and therefore it is manifest, that there Darius is put instead of Artaxerxes, by the corruption of the text.

Scaliger's opinion is, a that Xerxes was the Ahafuerus, and Hamestris, his queen, the Esther of the holy scriptures. His main reason for it is, the similitude that is between the names of Hamestris and Esther. But how much more the diffimilitude of their characters proves the contrary, hath been already shewn; and what will be hereafter faid of her dealing with Inarus and the Greeks taken with him in Egypt, and her frequent adulteries, will be a farther confirmation of it. Furthermore it appears from b Herodotus, that Xerxes had a fon by Hamestris that was marriageable in the 7th year of his reign; and therefore it is impossible she could be Esther; for Esther was not married to Ahafuerus c till the 7th year of his reign, nor could possibly have been taken into his bed sooner than two years before. For, according to the facred history, d it was the 4th year of Ahasuerus, when the choice of virgins was made for him, and a e whole year being employed in the purifications, whereby they were prepared for his bed, the could not be called thither till the 5th year of his reign; and therefore the 6th was the soonest that she could have a son by him. Befides Artaxerxes, the third fon of Hamestris, f being grown up to the state of a man at the death of his father, (which happened in the 21st year of his reign) he must have been born before the 6th year of his reign. All which put together, do fufficiently prove, how much soever the names Esther and Hamestris may be alike, the persons could not be the same.

But there being no fuch objections as to Artaxerxes Longimanus, it is most probable that he was the person. The ancientest and best evidences that can be had of this matter, are from the Greek version of the sacred text, called the Septuagiat, the apocryphal additions to the book of Esther, and Jesephus; and all these agree for Artaxerxes Longimanus. For Josephus s positively tells us it was he; and the Septuagiat, through the whole book of Esther, wherever the Hebrew text hath Ahasuerus, translate Artaxerxes; and the apocryphal additions to that book every where call the husband of Esther, Artaxerxes, who could a De Emendatione, lib. 6.

b Lib. 9.

Efther ii. 16.

d Esther ii.

e Esther ii. 12.

f Diodor. Sic. lib. Ir.

⁻ Aniq. lib. 11. c. &.

be none other than Artaxerxes Longimanus; for there are feveral circumstances related of him, both in the canonical and apocryphal Esther, which can by no means be applicable to the other Artaxerxes, called Mnemon. And Severus Sulpitius, and many other writers, as well of the ancients as the moderns, come also into this opinion. And the extraordinary a favour and kindness which Artaxerxes Longimanus shewed the Jews, beyond all the other kings that reigned in Persia, first in sending Ezra, and after, Nehemiah, for the repairing of the broken affairs of that people in Judah and Jerusalem, and the restoring of them again to their ancient prosperity, is what can scarce be accounted for on any other reason, but that they had in his bosom such a powerful advocate as Esther to solicit for them. But these, and the other transactions of this king, will be the subject of the next ensuing book.

*There were two other kings of Persia, that shewed kindness to the Jews, Cyrus, and Darius Hystaspes. Each of them granted a decree in favour of the Jews: but Artaxerxes went beyond them both; for he granted two decrees, by virtue of which both the ecclesiastical and political state of the Jews were throughly restored: and therefore, where the scripture names those kings of Persia by whose favour this restoration was made, he is named among them in the order as he reigned; for it is said (Ezra vi. 14.), that this was done by the commandment of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes, i. e. Cyrus, the sounder of the Persian empire, Darius Hyssaspes, and Artaxerxes Longimanus. For of these, and none other, is that text undoubtedly to be understood; and, no doubt, when the church and state were restored, much was done for the restoration of the temple also.

THE END OF VOLUME FIRST.

Mangth. .

